Understanding the Impact of Artificial Intelligence on Student Learning

Artificial intelligence (AI) is part of the national conversation around technology, education, science, and art. When an AI-generated entry won the digital art competition at the Colorado State Fair, it fueled public debate over the originality. Schools are concerned about AI's impact on learning and on our commitment to ensuring students possess critical knowledge and skills to be successful in the future.

Generative AI tools scour the web to ingest tremendous amounts of data previously created by human intelligence, and then respond to our prompts and questions to “create” an output for us. People who are skilled at using AI know the right questions to ask and how to guide AI to get the best output. Like any other technology, there is a skill to leveraging it—and that skill can be taught.

St. Francis students have engaged with AI tools in very creative ways this year. In History and English, students prompted AI tools like Perplexity, a chat tool, to help them brainstorm ideas and research topics. In Music, students used Suno AI music generator to create new songs from their own lyrics and understanding of musical theory. Projects like these demonstrate the courage of our teachers to teach with innovation instead of trepidation.

There is reason to be mindful about how and when students use AI tools. If you are lost in a foreign country and do not speak the language, Google Translate can quickly make some sense of road signs and help you communicate with people. But, if you’re trying to learn Spanish, using translator apps could leave you with a very poor understanding of the language and how to use it.

AI tools present schools with other concerns, like bias in generated answers, completely incorrect output known as hallucinations, and lack of protection of users’ personal information. Legal questions are being raised about how AI companies source their information. Students’ academic integrity can be at risk if they rely too heavily on AI tools or fail to properly cite them in their work.

In my previous job, an executive told our team to “come up with strategies to weaponize AI for our clients.” In meetings and webinars, educators ask, “How can we protect student learning from AI?” I do not see our relationship with AI in such combative terms. This technology is a game changer and forces schools to look critically at what and how we teach.

Fortunately for students at St. Francis, part of our mission is to help them become imaginative, critical thinkers and people for others. These qualities, ingrained in our daily practice, are very difficult for AI to emulate.

The Visual Arts at St. Francis: 'Making Art Is Like Opening a Door'

"Every child is an artist." —Pablo Picasso

It is a blessing to work with our wonderfully creative and uniquely talented young artists in Lower School. Each student has their own way of creating art and their own ideas of what art can be. One student reflected, "Making art is like opening a door."

Students explore and experiment with a variety of materials and techniques, with the goal of gaining confidence in their ideas and abilities as artists. They practice observation skills and self-expression, learn about artists and art history, and share thoughts about what they see and create. Participation in visual arts impacts the way students see the world around them and the way they see themselves.

Students also work collaboratively. Artists in our People for Others Council work together to create artwork for retirement-home residents, cards for new and visiting students, and notes of appreciation for faculty and staff. The collaborative creative efforts of our Primary, Lower, Middle, and Upper School artists can be seen in our newest art car.

This week has been dedicated to showcasing collaborative and individual works during the Fine Arts Festival, with presentations in music, dance, drama, and visual art. Artwork is exhibited on both campuses, featuring students from all divisions as well as SFE alumni artists. I welcome and encourage you to celebrate and be inspired by our outstanding community of artists.

I look forward to seeing you for the final day of the Fine Arts Festival!

With appreciation,

Wendy Miller
Lower School Visual Arts Faculty

The Watchful Eye and the Menil Young Writers Reading celebrate the extraordinary student writing that comes from the partnership between Writers in the Schools and the Menil Collection. Each year, WITS brings hundreds of Houston-area youth to the Menil for field trips that blend the literary and visual arts.

St. Francis ninth graders Catalina D. and Jorden T. and twelfth graders Farris M. and Elizabeth S. have been selected to have their writing published in the Menil anthology and are invited to read their selected pieces at the Menil Young Writers Reading in May.
