from the desk of Carolyn Connolly...

As noted in the Blackboard Connect message that went out 11/2, our Learning Commons will be open for public viewing on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon. I hope that many of you are able to take a twirl through and admire our new learning space. It's fantastic to see students and classes in there throughout the day and beyond.

Our supervised MS homework hour (thanks parent volunteers!) is also up and running again and takes place on Thursday afternoons from 2:15-3:30 on days school is in session. It is not a help center in the sense of tutoring, but it is a safe space for middle school students to stay after and do homework or collaborate on projects. As I have shared in the past, middle school students are not permitted to be in the building unsupervised before or after school. Students should report to school no earlier than 7:10 and should only be after school if they are with a specific teacher or part of an intramural activity.

Thank you to PSO and middle school parents who were able to visit with NELMS (New England League of Middle Schools) group this week. The team met with stakeholder groups across our school community and will ultimately share with the school some recommendations for our consideration. As the MS is already a strong focus of our School Improvement Plan, I look forward to hearing ideas and seeing how they align with our Core Values and Beliefs.

At the risk of sounding cranky, I will also take this opportunity to remind parents and students of our acceptable dress code. Students should come to school in seasonal but appropriate clothing. Running shorts, shirts which bare a mid-riff and other options that offer limited coverage are not in keeping with our expectations for appropriate dress. Students unsure of what to wear should consult the handbook under student and parent resources. I appreciate families supporting us in these efforts to maintain a respectful learning environment.

Looking forward to seeing folks at our Learning Commons openings and at upcoming tournament games!
