When parents enter "educational" relationships with public schools, do parents also have "unrealistic expectations" of what they will receive in return? Currently there is an emphasis on Reading as being the key to learning all subjects, so of necessity, students must read "on grade level." Students must have math skills sufficient to manage personal checkbooks and business enterprises. Students require Science understanding to compete globally in producing everyday products plus products for national safety. Teaching hours consumed deciding pronouns for boys becoming girls are hours stolen from teaching Reading Comprehension Skills necessary for making wise decisions. Hours lost discussing Dollar Reparations for supposed mistreatment of races 170 years ago would be better spent on learning Fractions and Percentages. In preparing their children to live successfully and safely in our modern world, parents contracted with the public school system to pay taxes in exchange for teachers' and administrators' services in imparting knowledge and skills to this end. As schools waste valuable instructional time on their "Critical Race Theory" agenda, parents can and will remove their children from "Woke" schools, and the state government will transfer that "per student money amount" to somewhere else that year, leaving public education schools/districts without their usual funds for hiring public school personnel or for building/repairing public schools. Thus, "Death of Public Schools." Let's educate our children in information that parents want their children to learn, or parents will find other schools that will!!!

Pleasant, South Carolina – Monday April 3, 2023 – One of the reasons I ran for Charleston County School Board is I felt, like many parents, that our voices were not being heard regarding what is in the best interest of our children and the curriculum that is being taught in our schools. I support parents' choice, that students come first, and we must support those teachers who want all our students to succeed. I had a parent reach out to me to express his concerns after his 4th grade child returned home from school distraught, in tears, totally confused and upset when their female teacher said to all the students "Today I am a Miss, but tomorrow I will be a Mr.", and that she started having the thoughts that she was a boy starting in 2nd grade. Subsequently, I was informed this same teacher had a similar conversation with her 5th grade students as well. Let me be perfectly clear, this is totally wrong on a variety of levels. It is not within a teacher's unilateral discretion to make statements about personal sexual choices to children without consulting school officials including the Superintendent & Principal (who in turn have a moral imperative to engage with parents). In my opinion, this teacher demonstrated poor judgement with no consideration of the emotional impact or confusion forced upon these young, impressionable children. This teacher should have talked with school and district administrators, healthcare professionals and other properly trained experts before dropping something so sensitive and confusing on such young children. During a recent meeting hosted by the group 'Moms for Liberty' this issue was brought up and discussed. My comments during that meeting have falsely been presented to the media by a single voice, contrary to the statements of many others present, yet the media have chosen to write on this subject matter. What I actually said was, "Given how understandably agitated he was, I applaud this father for making the right choice to write an email instead of pick up a gun." He expressed his concerns about this subject matter being discussed in a 4th grade class and how inappropriate such a conversation is in the classroom. I fully agree with this father, who's child was robbed of their innocence by someone they should have been able to trust. All students and educators must have a safe and stable learning environment. I will always stand up for our student's right to be kids and a parent's right to parent. I will always support those teachers who work very hard everyday, teaching our children, for the benefit of our kids. I agree with those who say what this teacher did was disruptive & destabilizing to the learning process and negatively impacted young children. I will continue to serve and defend parents, students, and those teachers who truly have our students' best interests at heart. Matthew 19:14 In Liberty, Tara Wood Chapter Chair Moms for Liberty Charleston County

The book, "How Do You Make A Baby?" contains cartoon illustrations of people having sex, yet was marketed for children ages 4 and up. S.C. Senator Kimbrell labels the book "repugnant," and fights to have it removed for youths under the age of 13. Kimbrell's proposed amendment requires each county library system, before getting its state aid, to certify that none of its branches have books in the Children's Section considered "prurient" for youths under 13. (The books would, however, be available to students with parental consent.) Charleston County Library Director Angela Craig suggests its Board might forgo $920,000. in state funding, because she fears the term "Prurient" might be misinterpreted. State Senator Kimbrell references S.C. State Law, which describes "prurient interest" as nudity or sex that arouses "lewd and lascivious desires or thoughts. "S.C. State Law provides this definition in its criminalization of promoting obscenity harmful to minors. Some Iowa state lawmakers would require teacher librarians to provide age-appropriate materials, and would bar description or visual depiction of defined sex acts. Opponents claim that excluding depiction of sexual acts would disqualify classical literature often taught in high schools. South Carolina Beaufort County Schools is reviewing 97 questionable books regarding appropriateness for elementary, middle and high school students. Thus, the decades-old debate continues as Public School Libraries and Public County Libraries decide on appropriate, reasonable, understandable book guidelines.
