Asked about it, Mr. Byrnes said:

The whole trouble, said the officer, was the indirect result of a divorce case now pending against John Abdulnor, one of the wealthiest Syrlans in this country. Mr. Winter to-day denied he ever said any-thing of the kind, and that the false charge would only hurt his opponents. A call was sent to Police Headquarters for assistance, and two minutes later Capt. John Zimmerman and the reserves of the Butlér street precinct were on their way to the scene. The wounded Syrian was taken to the station house and later removed to the Long Island College Hospital.

Policeman Nallin ran after one of the fleeing Syrians, who later turned out to be the Bishop, it is said. At Court and Dean streets the latter, according to the sworn affidavit of the officer, turned on him with a revolver, and then darted into a nearby stable, where he was arrested. The weapon was not found in his possession. Nailin says that the revolver fail-ed to go off, but he heard the click of the hammer. "For our purposes the weather was ideal, since the boys saw bad and good alike. The trip over was very rough, so rough that every boy got a taste of real seamanship. But then we could not experiment without nautical instruments as we would have liked to

"When we were between Madiera and Cherbourg a cyclone struck us and the St. Mary was compelled to heave to for forty-sight hours. Here it was that the old boat proved that she was stanch and steady. Nothing of any importance was carried away, nor was anybody ser-iously injured. A few of the boys suf-fered slight accidents, but they soon re-ubwared, none the worse for the experience. A ship going to Queenstown was caught in the same cyclone and had three boats carried away and the captain injured

On the journey home the weather was fine, too fine in fact, for the boys need as much rough training as possible to reason them. But it was admirably suited for using the nautical instruments.

"All the boys enjoyed the trip. From the beginning of the voyage, when we lay off Gien Cove and drilled in beamaniship, to this moment the youngsters have had most valuable experience, so that we are all very much pleased."
