Celebrating the Magic of Mathematics: Pi Day at Creekview Intermediate

On March 14th, Creekview Intermediate joined schools worldwide in marking Pi Day, a day dedicated to the intriguing and infinite mathematical constant, pi (π). But at Creekview, it wasn't just about numbers; it was a day filled with activities that blended learning with fun, engaging students, staff, and the community in the fascinating world of mathematics.

This Pi Day, Creekview Intermediate's 5th grade Orange team turned their hard-earned DOJO points into a moment everyone will remember: the chance to pie a teacher in the face. This unique reward, earned through positive behavior and academic achievements, brought a fun twist to the day.

This celebration reminded Creekview Intermediate of its commitment to a learning environment that values academic success as much as the joy of shared experiences. It was about much more than math; it was about community, celebration, and memorable lessons that extend beyond the classroom.

Northwood Elementary Celebrates Culture and Traditions

Earlier this year, Northwood Elementary hosted a special day of “Culture and Traditions” presentations, thanks to the efforts of staff members Kayla Craig and Erin Wolf. They invited parents to come into the classroom and share their family backgrounds with the students.

The goal was simple: allow families to tell their stories and highlight the uniqueness of their cultures. Parents enthusiastically participated, discussing their traditions, foods, and music with eager students. This initiative gave students a glimpse into the many cultures of their school community.

Featuring stories, artifacts, and traditional clothing, the parents’ presentations transformed classrooms into dynamic learning spaces. Students engaged by listening, asking questions, and developing a greater appreciation for the varied backgrounds of their peers.

The event was a celebration of the distinct identities and cultures that each family contributes to the Northwood Elementary community.
