

Throughout high school I dedicated my time to creative arts extracurriculars including tech crew, jazz band and the Ram Pages, but it wasn't until joining video production that I decided to pursue a film degree. My major required an incredible amount of teamwork, organization and communication, which teachers and coaches at OHS prepared me for by guiding me into leadership roles, encouraging my creativity along the way. In college I directed two documentaries and received a Creative Inquiry Scholarship and the Donovan Medallion for Excellence in Film and Television. I also freelanced as a photographer, videographer, editor and production assistant before graduating and becoming a Production Coordinator at QVC, a live shopping network. Now I get to work (and sometimes appear) on live television with an amazing team while writing and making films with friends in my spare time.
