Violence in the Congo: Comparing Perspectives

Stanley's Account:

"At 2 PM, we emerged out of the shelter of the dense wooded banks and came into a vast plain. We pulled briskly over to gain the high ground when, looking westward, we saw a light that was the flash of a rifle through every man and every fiber of our bodies... a flutilla of gigantic canoes bearing down upon us, which both in size and number greatly exceeded anything we had seen."

"We had sufficient time to take a view of the mighty force bearing down on us and to count the number of our vessels. There were 54 of them. The crews consisted of large gangs of hand-picked slaves from ivory horns, and a straggling crew of 2,000 human beings did not fail to soothe our nerves or to increase our confidence."

"I turned to take a last look at the people and said to them: 'Stand firm as they come, and you see the first spear and then take good aim. Don't fire all at once. Keep aiming until you see the eye of your man. Don't think of pulling away, for only your guns can save you.'"

"The monster canoe aimed straight for my boat... the warriors... let fly their spears and on either side there was a noise of rushing bodies. But every spear was soon lost in the ripping, crackling of our musketry."

"Our blood was on fire. It was a murderous world, and we felt for the first time that we hated the filthy, villainous ghost who inhabited it."

-Henry Morton Stanley, Through the Dark Continent, 1885

Mojimba's Account:

"When we heard that the man with the white flesh was journeying down the Luabala we were approached with courtesies. All night long the drums announced the strange news. A man with white flesh that man, we said to ourselves, has a white skin. We must have got that from the river-kingdom. He will be one of our brothers who were drowned in the river. All life comes from the water, and in the water he has found life. Now is coming back to us. He is coming home."

"But as we drew near his canoes there were loud reports: bang bang! And five-staves spears bits of iron at us. We were paralyzed with fright; our mouths hung wide open and we could not shut them. Things such as we had never seen, never heard of, never dreamed of, they were the work of evil spirits! Several of my men plunged into the water. What had they to do with? No - for others fell down also, in the canoes. Some screamed, 'Murder! Murder!' others were silent - they were dead. The blood flowed from their veins in their bodies. 'War that is war!' I yelled. 'Go back!' The canoes sped back to our village with all the strength our spirits could impart to our oars."

"That was no brother! That was the worst enemy our country had ever seen."

"And still those bang went on, the long spears spot fire, flying pieces of iron whistled around us... and our brothers continued to fall. We fled into our village - they come after us. We fled into the forest and hung ourselves on the ground. When we were that way, they were silent - they were dead. 'War that is war!' I yelled. 'Go back!' The canoes sped back to our village with all the strength our spirits could impart to our oars."
