

Types of Support

Special Education classrooms typically have at least one teacher and a special education assistant to help support students and their learning throughout the day. This provides more one-on-one time to focus on lessons and areas of growth!

Learning Support

Learning Support is provided for students who are primarily in need of academic intervention and support. Students participating in Learning Support programs may include those identified with a specific learning disability, mild intellectual disability, visual impairment, hearing impairment, emotional disturbance, orthopedic impairments, and/or autism.

Learning Support classes are located in all schools within the district. For some classes in the middle and high school levels, collaborative Instruction (CI) is available. CI classes provide support through co-teaching from a content instructor and a special education teacher in the general education curriculum.
