

TWO MORE CROCKETT SUMMER CAMPS CONCLUDED WEDNESDAY

By Ron Barry

One of the more endearing traits of a rural county school system is the fact that several of its athletes play on more than one athletic team.

That fact was in significant display Wednesday when several Lady Cavalier players hustled from the Crockett High auxiliary gym – where they'd been helping conduct a basketball camp – over to the main facility, to assist with the final day of a volleyball camp.

The head coaches of the two sports – veteran basketball head Kayla Irvin and “rookie” Andrew Laman – were both finishing up camps for the Crockett district’s younger hopefuls. Irvin’s gathering was for three consecutive days this week, while Laman – who is preparing for his first season as a head coach after serving as an assistant under Bobby Rawson – spread a four-day instructional period over a 10-day span.

Following is a mix of scenes from the two camps, featuring both athlete “coaches” and their younger participants.
