TYNGSBORO -- Greater Lowell Technical High School's Drama Club recently presented its spring production, "Almost, Maine," by John Cariani, and it was a huge success.

Set in a small, fictional Maine town of Almost, the play's scenes occur simultaneously across the town as the Northern Lights dance across the sky. The characters, and their relationships, represent the different facets of love that are part of the human experience. Some characters discover love, while others come to terms with its end as the play intertwines the complexity of human emotion with the comedic moments of falling in and out of love.

The play was such a hit that the Drama Club was asked to perform for a student audience during the school day. English classes were invited to attend and given the opportunity to discuss the themes presented.
