

Greater Lowell Tech inspires 2013 grad to teach children

The Lowell Sun

UPDATED: 12/18/2016 06:36:06 AM EST

TYNGSBORO -- Brittney Ouellette of Dracut graduated from the Early Childhood Education program at Greater Lowell Technical High School in 2013, and stepped right into the education of local youngsters. Ouellette began her career at Creative Minds in Dracut through Greater Lowell Tech's Cooperative Education Program, and she is still employed there today as a teacher in the toddler program.

It's a job she said she truly enjoys -- mainly because of the guidance of Lynn Willey, one of Greater Lowell Tech's Early Childhood Education instructors, who Ouellette said inspired and motivated her to pursue her career.

"Mrs. Willey always pushed me to challenge myself and never gave up on helping me accomplish my goals in and out of school," she said.

Ouellette is attending Middlesex Community College and is on track to graduate this month with her Associate degree.

Brittney Ouellette

Sun staff photos can be ordered visiting our SmugMug site.