Smart Phone and Tablet Screen Recommendations

American Academy of Pediatrics
DEDICATED TO THE HEALTH OF ALL CHILDREN®
New Jersey Chapter CORPORATE MEMBER

Did you know? The American Academy of Pediatrics updated their "screen use" recommendations and recommends the following:

Under 2 years	No screen time with the exception of Skype or Face Time to communicate and connect with distant relatives
Preschool Age	Limit media to no more than one hour per day. Unstructured, interactive play with others is the best way for children to develop higher level thinking skills.
Older Children and Teens	Consider setting up a "Media Use Plan" (www.healthychildren.org/mediauseplan). Never let children play or watch programs on iPhone - the screen is too small for their eyes.

Keep in mind the following findings:

- Avoid screens 1 hour before bed. The blue light emitted from screens can decrease the body's sleep hormone, melatonin. Consider installing free software called "f.lux" which will decrease blue light emitted from your screens at night.
- Excess screen time can lead to obesity in all ages, as well as cognitive, social, and language delays in young children.
- As a parent, limit your own use! Excessive media use by parents can decrease communication and interaction with children, and may affect the parent child relationship.
- Have "tech free" times like mealtime and bedtime. Have children charge devices in a place other than their bedroom.
- Do not use screens to calm your child! Young children can become dependent on screens for entertainment and calming, and will not learn to self-calm.
- Take "eye" breaks. Optometrists recommend looking away from the computer every 20 minutes for 20 seconds at an object 20 feet away.
- Play and interact with your child! Let them learn through play, and develop relationships through interactions.
