

Parenting+

Raising a family is among the most profound, rewarding, and important endeavors in life, and being a teen parent can make that task even more challenging. Throughout this course, the essence of parenthood is explored through both community programs and student-based presentations on various topics crucial to parenting. Students gain a formal understanding of Child Development, where students examine the stages of growth and milestones in a child's life. Biosocial Development milestones shed light on the physical and psychological aspects of child growth.

The Classroom/Lab

In this class, using the Real-World Parenting Curriculum, students delve into the intense journey of parenthood through a variety of lenses. Healthy relationships and conflict resolution lessons provide insights into fostering positive interactions within the family unit. In addition to emphasizing the importance of nurturing the parent-child relationship and creating strong emotional connections from the early stages of infancy, the program will also give students valuable insights and practical strategies that will support them on their journey through parenthood. This will empower them to navigate the complexities of parenthood with confidence and compassion.
