

How to Explore a College from Afar

- Sometimes a fun place to start is to just search the school on google images and see what comes up--that can give you a sense of the campus
- Do a virtual tour & information session through the admissions office--this is the gold standard and should give you at least a basic feel for the school
- Follow the school on social media--usually admissions offices have an official account. However, also dig deeper--if you want to play rugby (or do a different activity) at a school, find that activity/club's instagram/twitter account and check that out.
- Read the school newspaper online
- Research the city the university calls home
- Talk to a current student--you can get connected either through admissions or also possibly through Falmouth alums who are now there
- Explore academics-distribution/core requirements, classes required for your prospective major, etc.
- Reach out to admissions counselors with questions--there are sometimes admissions officers assigned to territories so check their website to see who covers our area
