Online Activity can hurt you when applying for College or Jobs

The number of college admissions officials and employers using Facebook/Twitter/Instagram to learn more about an applicant is rapidly increasing. College admission officials have reported finding damaging information posted online by a prospective student that has hurt his or her chances of getting accepted.

Employers are using the Facebook/Twitter/Instagram profiles of job candidates to filter out weaker applicants based on lifestyle, attitudes and personal appearance.

It's important to remember that the Internet is a public place, and, many times, what you put online can be accessed by anyone. Every word and picture you post can be perceived as a reflection on you, so be careful about what you put online. Don't post anything that would reflect poorly on your judgment or character.
