Crusader Chronicles

Good Shepherd Catholic School

Do we recognize value in the work we do? This seems like an essential question to consider because the value we place on our work speaks about ourselves. First, those who value their work see themselves as contributing members to the ongoing work of creation. They recognize that big or small, significant or insignificant, exciting or mundane, what they contribute by their work creates a better world. Second, those who value their work provide a product or service of better quality. The service or product is appropriated as a reflection of one's talents, abilities, interests, and motivation. The result becomes a healthy and humble matter of pride. Third, those who value their work tend to be people of joy. Every day at work may not be a happy one, but there is a deeper sense of joy overall in connecting with people and topics that create energy, passion, and satisfaction in performance. The dignity of work is about meaningful co-creation, healthy yet humble pride, and inner joy. It uplifts not only us, but also those around us as one family in faith.
