

DIGITAL DESIGN

at University High School

What will students learn?

Digital Design at University High School is a (maximum) four-year course track that provides competencies in presentation production, digital photography, basic computer knowledge, illustration software, and photo editing software. The track focuses on proficiency in Adobe Illustrator and Photoshop -- industry-standard software for graphic designers around the globe. These credentials can be earned in the second year of the track.

The program track provides students training to become graphic designers and earn related Adobe software certifications. Graphic designers are professionals who create visual concepts, by hand or using computer software, to communicate ideas that inspire, inform, or captivate consumers.

What credentials can students earn?

Students will have the opportunity to earn industry certification in Adobe Photoshop (digital photo editing) and Adobe Illustrator (digital drawing). The two certifications combine into the Adobe Certified Professional certification.
