Integrated Co-Teaching (ICT)

Program Description:

The Integrated co-teaching program enables students to receive special education instruction while participating within the general educational setting. Students will work towards meeting State standards and district grade level expectations. Students may have below average to average cognitive abilities and may have low average to below grade level scores in reading, math and/or related academic skill deficits. Students may require differentiated, specially-designed instruction, program modifications, testing accommodations, and support from school personnel. This class has a maximum of 12 students with IEPs assigned to an integrated co-teacher and a general education teacher. At the elementary level some of our students may require a special class (15:1) for multisensory reading interventions in ELA. This special class provides additional instruction in a smaller students-to-teacher ratio as well as allows for a more individualized approach to decoding/encoding (word study) skill development by the special education teacher.

Elementary Special Classes

Program: Intensive Needs Special Class (8:1:2),
Communication Development Special Class (12:1:2), &
Communication Development Special Class (12:1:1)

Program Description:

The intensive needs 8:1:2 special class program is geared towards our students who take or will take the New York State Alternative Assessment (NYSAA). Students in our 8:1:2 programing generally have more significant cognitive deficits as well as substantial language, communication, and behavioral/management needs that require intensive language training, discrete trial teaching, intensive behavioral support structures and at times augmentative communication systems. Students in this program may have delayed gross and fine motor planning, body awareness, social reciprocity, self-regulation, as well as activities of daily living (ADL) which require additional related services. This class has a maximum of 8 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant and 1 paraprofessional.

The Communication Development 12:1:2 special class program serves students who do have cognitive and communication deficits, but may demonstrate slightly higher independence in their language and communication skills. Students in these special classes continue to work on the acquisition of academic, social, and behavioral skills, but may be able to do so at a more independent level. Students in this program may need additional support in gross motor planning, fine motor activities, speech and language and behavioral regulation which may require related services. This class has a maximum of 12 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant and 1 paraprofessional.

The Communication Development 12:1:1 special class program is for students who will work toward meeting state standards. Students may have below average to average cognitive abilities and may be below grade level in the core content areas. Students may require differentiated instruction, specially-designed instruction, program modifications and testing accommodations throughout their school day. Students may also demonstrate some social/emotional dysregulation and/or insufficient self-regulation skills. Students have the opportunity to participate in general education for some academic courses and/or special areas. This class has a maximum of 12 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant.

Secondary Special Classes

Program: Intensive Needs Special Class (9:1:3), Communication Development Special Class (12:1:2) & Communication Development Special Class (12:1:1)

Program Description:

The Intensive Needs 9:1:3 special class program is geared towards students who take the New York State Alternative Assessment (NYSAA) in order to obtain a Skills and Achievement Commencement Credential. Students in our 9:1:3 programming have more significant cognitive deficits as well as substantial language, communication, and behavioral/management needs that require intensive language training, discrete trial teaching, intensive behavioral support structures and at times augmentative communication systems. Students in this program may have significantly delayed gross and fine motor planning, body awareness, social reciprocity, self-regulation, as well as activities of daily living (ADL) which require additional related services. In addition, students in the 9:1:3 are teaching pre-transition skills, and vocational skills when at the high school, that are a combination of academic and daily living skills necessary to participate independently in all aspects of their lives. Moderate to significant support of adults is necessary for students in this program to actively participate in functional academics as well as vocational and ADL activities. The 9:1:3 program begins the critically important work of helping students obtain the skills necessary to be contributing members of their own community to the fullest extent possible when their transition to adulthood through a blend of academics and life skills. In addition to functional academics, the students work toward; caring for personal needs, safety awareness, occupational skills, exhibiting proper physical and manual skills, communication, character building, self-advocacy, achieving independence and problem solving skills which may require the support of related services. This class has a maximum of 9 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant and 2 paraprofessionals.

The Communication Development 12:1:2 special class program serves students who do have significant cognitive and communication deficits, but may demonstrate slightly higher independence in their language and communication skills. Students in these special classes continue to work on the acquisition of basic academic, social, and behavioral skills, but may be able to do so at a more independent level. Students in this program may need additional support in gross motor planning, fine motor activities, speech and language and behavioral regulation which may require related services. While the 12:1:2 also supports the critically important work of helping students obtain the skills necessary to be contributing members of their own community when they reach adulthood, moderate adult support is provided during instruction in basic academics, activities of daily living (ADL) and pre-vocational skills, however students in this program may be able to work on these skills with a little more independence. Some students may have the opportunity to participate in general education for elective courses. Students in this program typically take the New York State Alternative Assessment (NYSAA) and work towards obtaining the Skills and Achievement Commencement Credential. This class has a maximum of 12 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant and 1 paraprofessional.

The Communication Development 12:1:1 special class program is for our students who will work toward meeting state standards and that the high school level work toward the achievement of a local diploma and/or a Career Development & Occupational Studies Commencement Credential (CDOS credential) and if necessary the Skills and Achievement Commencement Credential. Students may have below average to below average cognitive abilities and are significantly below grade level in the core content areas. Students may require differentiated instruction, specially-designed instruction, program modifications and testing accommodations and program modifications throughout their school day. Students are working on pre-vocational and vocational skills with adult support and prompting. Prior to transitioning out of secondary public education, students in this program will focus on career exploration and vocational skill acquisition in order to secure post-secondary career and/or additional training with as much independence as possible. Students in the 12:1:1 may also demonstrate some social/emotional dysregulation and/or insufficient self-regulation skills. Some students may have the opportunity to participate in general education for elective courses. This class has a maximum of 12 students with disabilities supported by 1 special education teacher and at least 1 teaching assistant.

Resource Room:

Level: Middle School & High School

Program Description:

Resource Room is a special education program for a student with a disability who is registered in either a special class or a general education program while in need of specialized supplementary instruction in an individualized small group setting. This allows the teacher to focus on deficit skills development in accordance with IEP goals. Additionally, the teacher works within the framework of the curricular needs at each grade level. The minimum time spent in a resource room must be 3 hours a week at no more than a 5:1 ratio. Within the model, there is a great deal of collaboration between the resource room teacher and the student's content teachers and support staff to ensure there is carryover of the skills teaching in the small setting. Students within the program generally have mild to moderate deficits in the areas of reading, math, written expression, spelling, vocabulary, and organizational and time management skills.

Supports for Students:

Middle School: Resource Room Program: 1 x 40 minutes daily

High School: Resource Room Program: 1 x 40 minutes daily

Support Seminar:

Level: Middle School

Program Description:

Support Seminar is a special education program for a student with a disability who is registered in either an integrated co-teaching, general education, or partial academic core program that is in need of specialized supplementary instruction in an individualized small group setting. This allows the teacher to focus on deficit skills development in accordance with IEP goals. Additionally, the teacher works within the framework of the curricular needs at each grade level with no more than a 15:1 ratio. Within the model, there is a great deal of collaboration between the support seminar teacher (case manager) and the student's content teachers and support staff to ensure there is carryover of the skills teaching in the small setting. Students within the program generally have mild to moderate deficits in the areas of reading, math, written expression, spelling, vocabulary, and organizational and time management skills.

Supports for Students:

Middle School: Special Class 15:1 (Support Seminar) 1 x 40 minutes daily

Special Education Reading Instruction:

Level: Middle School & High School

Program Description:

Reading intervention is a small class environment which provides students with an intensive, structured, research-based multisensory program to teach the structure of the English language and structure for decoding and encoding. Students will learn fluent decoding and encoding skills as the program components include use of a systematic and integrated approach to decoding, morphology, encoding, high frequency word instruction, oral reading fluency, vocabulary, and comprehension. This intensive program is designed for students who have not yet mastered and/or not made progress in decoding and encoding and require multisensory language instruction or who require more intensive structured literacy instruction due to a reading/language based learning disability. Collaboration between special class reading teachers, special education teachers, general education teachers, and speech/language therapists (if applicable) ensure a seamless application of reading strategies as the student incorporates their IEP goals.
