C. Introduction and Presentation Education Resource Strategies (ERS)

Catherine Preymont and Ventura Rodrigues gave a presentation on ERS

C. Carmignani wanted people to understand we have department chair positions at the high school, we just need to develop them more.

C. Panczyk stated she thinks there's an opportunity to define the many stipend positions and decide if those positions are being used wisely.

C. Carmignani wanted to know from Heather Harriman if it's typical that students with communication disabilities seem to be identified at the preschool or kindergarten level. She wanted to know if we should be giving more support in that area or do some intervention work ahead of time.

Heather stated that there have been students that had communication as a primary disability but didn't have any speech and language services. When they had reevaluation meetings they changed disability categories to specific learning disabilities which seemed more important. They have these discussions in coordinator meetings.

C. Carmignani wanted the public to understand that the statement in the presentation that students were not being fully included in the curriculum is something that Heather Harriman has been working on this year. She wanted people to be aware it is already being addressed.

Introduction

About Education Resource Strategies (ERS)

ERS empowers school system leaders to make transformative shifts in resources, structures, and practices so that all students — especially those with the greatest learning needs and those furthest from opportunity — attend a school where they can learn and thrive. We partner with district teams, expand leaders' knowledge and skills, and share lessons and tools with the field.

- District Work Jul 2022 - Dec 2023
- Previous District Work
- State/Network Jul 2022 – Dec 2023
- Previous State Work

Methodology

Objectives for ERS and DCRSD Partnership

Context and Goals

- Dudley-Charlton Mission: Advance the knowledge and well-being of our children and our community
- The Challenge: Making this vision a reality for all students and school community members, while recognizing and working within existing resource constraints

What is Needed

- Aligning use of resources – people, time and money – to highest-priority (and highest-potential) strategies for supporting students, teachers, and the broader school/district community
- Making targeted, judicious trade-offs to support these strategic investments

By the end of these two weeks, we will identify a subset of resource allocation insights and high-potential resource shifts to support Dudley-Charlton in strengthening alignment between resource use and strategy

ERS Approach

ERS Process

- Level-set on student demographics, achievement, and district funding levels
- Test hypotheses on staffing, central office spending, school spending, and school design
- Identify potential opportunities to shift resources – considering both how much DCRSD invests in different functions and how well DCRSD deploys these resources

Data Utilized

- Interviewed DCRSD staff and stakeholders
- Analyzed DCRSD data
- Compiled and analyzed publicly available DESE data
- Assessed DCRSD resource use across key areas
- Utilized ERS comparative district database and expertise on resource use

We reviewed DCRSD data across four broad areas

Human Capital

School Funding & Resource Sharing Across
Schools

School
Design

Central Office and School Support

Executive Summary

ERS identified some initial resource allocation insights across these four areas

	Current State
Human Capital	Educator Workforce: Overall, DCRSD has a large population of experienced teachers, which corresponds to higher average teacher salaries than most peer districts. In contrast, many principals are new to their roles, as are most paraprofessionals.
	Professional Learning: Teacher leader roles and teacher collaboration time, which can be key ways to support teachers, are utilized differently across and within schools.
Funding & Resource Sharing Across Schools	Funding: While the district spends in line with comparisons on most areas, it spends more than comparison districts on instruction and less on administration.
	Resource Sharing: While there is some resource centralization and sharing across schools, geography and school structures may limit additional opportunities for resource sharing.
School Design	Personalized Time & Attention: There is little standardization for multi-tiered systems of support (MTSS) across the district, and all principals shared noted that refining MTSS is a priority.
	Special Education: SWD identification rates are different across schools and disability types; special education staffing is lower in some areas than others, both across schools and when compared to peer districts.
Central Office and School Support	Management Capacity: DCRSD spends less on administration than its peer districts, which corresponds to less formal and consistent protocols, procedures and support structures.
	Transparency: Across departments and levels, staff report a lack of clarity in how dollars are allocated to schools on an annual basis, outside of staffing changes driven by enrollment.

Potential resource shifts to explore

- Implement more integrated professional learning for educators by expanding collaboration time in elementary schools, and restructuring teacher leader roles across the district
- Develop more formal supports for paraprofessionals and principals, both of which tend to have less experience on average than teachers
- Review budget and staffing allocations to ensure current patterns are strategic
- Support middle and high school principals in implementing more structured MTSS models, including exploring opportunities for implementing interventions or other student supports into the school day
- Review staffing and service model for students with disabilities to ensure that they are best aligned to student needs
- Invest in documentation of district procedures and protocols to create more transparency and consistency around district practices and to increase staff capacity in the long-term

What we've heard...

- Teacher retention is seen as a strength in DCRSD by both school and district leaders

The majority of teachers in DCRSD have more than 8 years of experience

Personalized time and attention relies on a multi-tiered system of supports (MTSS)

DCRSD has some areas of opportunity for better supporting all students

What makes
for strong
MTSS efforts:

High-quality classroom instruction in the general education classroom

- Incoming assistant superintendent has developed a focus on universally-designed curriculum, and has started to lead new curriculum adoption across schools
- The district does not employ any instructional or curricular leadership FTEs to support teachers in delivering high-quality instruction

Ongoing student assessment to provide information about a student's learning rate and level of achievement, that is then used to determine each student's instructional needs

- Elementary schools are using assessments on some cadence to drive grouping and support offerings for intervention
- Middle and high schools do not have the same structures to use assessment to guide academic supports for general education students

Tiered instruction by knowledgeable instructors aligned to core curriculum, with opportunities for small group instruction targeted at individual learning needs

- DCRSD currently provides a higher percentage of its SWD services in pull-out structures than peer districts or state guidelines
- Elementary schools have intervention for ELA support, but not for math support
- Middle and high schools do not have intervention blocks; daily exploratory blocks could be an area of opportunity for implementing academic support

DCRSD
Current State
Insights:

DCRSD identifies students with disabilities (SWD) at rates consistent with peer districts of similar geography and wealth

The percentage of SWD students in DCRSD increased overall from 2019 to 2023, especially in certain grades

DCRSD Identification Rates from '19 & '23

Grade-wise DCRSD Identification Rates from '19 & '23

What we've heard...

- The Therapeutic Classroom program at Dudley MS and ES has doubled in the 23-24 school year
- DCRSD reputation for having a great special ed program may be a draw for families

However, DCRSD has a higher percentage of students identified with communication disabilities

Top 3 Common Disabilities Identified Across the State and in DCRSD, '22-23

		Communication	Learning Difficulties	Autism	Developmental Delay	Health
Geographic Wealth & Demographics Wealth	State	-	24%	16%	-	15%

	North Middlesex	-	30%	18%	13%	-
	Quabbin	20%	20%	-	-	18%

What we've heard...

- DCRSD recently implemented the use of standardized assessment for students transitioning from early intervention into placements

DCRSD's SWD model utilizes fewer special education (SPED) teachers than peer districts

These differences in staffing may be related to DCRSD fully including less of its SWD students than peer districts

- Many principals are using school-based student services roles to supplement administration duties

Educator collaboration structures look different across the district

School with daily teacher collaboration time during the school day
Principal collaboration structures	Try to meet weekly to discuss best practices and collaboration opportunities				Communicate with one another regularly to discuss alignment		---

- Teachers have PLCs after school once a month for common planning but generally do not have common planning during the school day/week
- Data could be used more effectively to drive instruction if teachers had common planning time with specialists and SPED teachers

- Each MS teacher has one preparation period and one collaboration period daily with grade level teams
- HS teachers have one preparation period and one duty period per day, lead HS teachers have an additional non-teaching period that could be utilized for collaboration

All schools have teacher lead roles that could serve as areas of opportunity

School with teacher leader roles
School with principals who think those teacher leader roles could be better utilized

What we've heard...

- Most teacher leaders are serving as curriculum facilitators for their grades but expectations for, and implementation of, that role are inconsistent
- Teacher leaders are not formally utilized as trainers or coaches for other teachers
- In middle schools, having grade-level teacher leaders may not be as strategic as having content-specific teacher leaders, particularly as it relates to curriculum development and alignment

DCRSD spends most of its PK-12 operating budget on instruction and the least on PD and administration

DCRSD spends 81.3% of its PK-12 operating budget on salaries & benefits

Total Expenditure on Salaries & Benefits, '23-24
$45.1 m

Key Takeaways

- 81.3% of the budget is spent on salaries and benefits across functions, 50% of which is for teacher salaries
- Only 2% of the total salaries is spent on administration FTE
- 20% of the salaries & benefits budget is spent on insurance and retirement programs

DCRSD's per pupil expenditure is lower than most of its peer districts

Generally, DCRSD spends funding in similar ways to peer districts

DCRSD's overall total instructional spending is similar to its peers

Total Instructional Staff & Materials Expenditure Across Peer Districts, '22-23

But within instruction, DCRSD spends less on instructional leadership than many of its peers

Generally larger schools in DCRSD have higher operating expenses

PreK-12 Operating Expenses Across DCRSD Schools*, '23-24

*Note: Schools have different SPED service offerings which may contribute to differences

Schools generally use funding in similar ways, but there is more variation with instructional spending

For example, elementary schools with similar enrollment have different instructional spending patterns

Schools across DCRSD have a range of ~6 staff per 100 students with PreK – 1 schools having the most staff

Schools in the district currently have limited cross-school resource sharing

Most schools operate independently of one another although there is some resource sharing across schools

- Primarily enrollment for ES/MS is based on town residence, with Dudley students attending Dudley schools and Charlton students attending Charlton schools
- Some positions, including some SPED coordinators, paraprofessionals, and specials teachers are shared across elementary schools, but this sometimes presents challenges with schedules and staffing capacity

Some resources are targeted to certain areas

- The ILC (Intensive Learning Center) is in Charlton and is focused on more intensive cognitive impairments; the therapeutic programs focused on emotional and behavioral challenges are located in Dudley
- The district is starting to enroll students with disabilities based on those program offerings rather than solely on town residence

Personalized time and attention is key to ensuring success of all students

Typical:

A one-size-fits-all instructional approach that meets the learning needs of some but not all students. Standardized and rigid class size, teacher loads, and time.

Strategic:

Rigorous and differentiated instruction for all students that supports meeting grade-level expectations, enabled through student groupings and schedules that match resources to student needs and that are adjusted during the school year as needs change.

Personalized time and attention relies on a multi-tiered system of supports (MTSS)

DCRSD has some areas of opportunity for better supporting all students

What makes
for strong
MTSS efforts:

High-quality classroom instruction in the general education classroom

- Incoming assistant superintendent has developed a focus on universally-designed curriculum, and has started to lead new curriculum adoption across schools
- The district does not employ any instructional or curricular leadership FTEs to support teachers in delivering high-quality instruction
- There is limited district-wide standardization or expectations on what MTSS should look like

Ongoing student assessment to provide information about a student's learning rate and level of achievement, that is then used to determine each student's instructional needs

- Elementary schools are using assessments on some cadence to drive grouping and support offerings for intervention
- Middle and high schools do not have the same structures to use assessment to guide academic supports for general education students

Tiered instruction by knowledgeable instructors aligned to core curriculum, with opportunities for small group instruction targeted at individual learning needs

- DCRSD currently provides a higher percentage of its SWD services in pull-out structures than peer districts or state guidelines
- Elementary schools have daily intervention blocks that provide targeted instruction
- Daily exploratory blocks in middle and high schools could be an area of opportunity for implementing more targeted academic support

DCRSD staffing for other positions that support special education services ranges by position type

What we've heard...

- Interest in differentiating responsibilities of school-based support roles, especially psychologists and adjustment counselors

And the staffing ratios for some of these positions range across schools, even within the same grade level

And the staffing ratios for some of these positions range across schools, even within the same grade level

These differences in staffing may be related to DCRSD fully including less of its SWD students than peer districts

Inclusion rates differ across DCRSD schools indicating student need or service models may also vary

DCRSD ELLs may also be overly represented in partial and sub-separate models

Placement of DCRSD ELL-SWD Students, '23-24

Key Takeaways

- English language learners (ELLs) appear over-represented within the student with disability (SWD) population since they represent 3.8% of district enrollment but 5.8% of SWDs
- ELLs with disabilities (ELL-SWD) appear under-represented in full inclusion and over-represented in partial inclusion and sub-separate classrooms

Providing clear and transparent structures is critical for efficient operating, and requires district staff capacity

Transparency requires clearly documented rules for how staff are allocated to schools...

Rules can be

- In terms of a ratio or threshold (e.g. 1 FTE for every X students)
- Vary by school type, level, size, etc.
- Consider school poverty or other indicators of student need

...and should

- Be clearly defined and publicly available
- Be replaced by exceptions that are documented

...as well as transparent communication of staffing decisions with school leaders

Central office should

- Prioritize thorough communication of staffing allocation decisions with principals, including formulas driving final numbers and reasons for any exceptions
- Articulate flexibilities available to principals
- Provide a standard process for principals to petition staffing decisions

...so that school leaders

- Understand exactly how staff is allocated to their schools
- Understand why exceptions are made, if they are made

But Dudley-Charlton has fewer leadership FTE than most peer districts

Limited staffing constrains district ability to create clear structures, which impacts principal experience

Area	Interview Findings
Constrained capacity	• Staff reported a lack of management layers to support implementation of initiatives at the district level • Staff also reported limited support and staff at central office, particularly in certain areas like HR and Finance • “Everyone wears many hats at the central office to make things work”
Clarity on roles and structures	• Staff named the annual budgeting and staffing processes as specific examples of areas where requirements and processes have not always been clear • “We need a standard operating procedure with clear roles and responsibilities” • “There aren’t always clearly documented rules and regulations, we rely a lot on past precedent”
Principal role	• Multiple principals played more than one role in the ‘23-24 schools year, e.g. serving as Title III and IV administrator, interim assistant superintendent, and/or interim SPED coordinator on top of their principal duties • Most principals named an inability to find time to focus on strategy, and that more of their time was spent on day-to-day operations; this was most common in elementary schools where principals are often the only full-time administrator
Principal support structures	• Principals noted that Ed Counsel meetings with school principals and the superintendent are very helpful for logistical discussions and tasks, but that there is not always enough time for discussing strategy and alignment • “I am always able to call someone for support at the district, but I do feel I have to ask for [support]; there are no formal support structures” • “A more robust induction and mentoring program is needed for both principals and teachers”

ERS recommends potential areas of exploration for strengthening strategic resource use in DCRSD

Potential resource shifts to explore

- Implement more integrated professional learning for educators by expanding collaboration time in elementary schools, and restructuring teacher leader roles across the district
- Develop more formal supports for paraprofessionals and principals, both of which tend to have less experience on average than teachers
- Review budget and staffing allocations to ensure current patterns are strategic
- Support middle and high school principals in implementing more structured MTSS models, including exploring opportunities for implementing interventions or other student supports into the school day
- Review staffing and service model for students with disabilities to ensure that they are best aligned to student needs
- Invest in documentation of district procedures and protocols to create more transparency and consistency around district practices and to increase staff capacity in the long-term

Opportunities for expanding collaboration time

To find dedicated time to embed professional learning and collaboration within the school day...districts can

Option	Description
Utilize early release or community partner enrichment	• Adopt a half-day calendar so that teachers have extended time for professional learning and collaboration after students go home one day per week. • Can also collaborate with external partners to provide student programming during early release or during the school day so that teachers are free to meet for professional learning and collaboration. • Also increases individual planning time for teachers.
Stack planning time with small group instruction or non-instructional blocks; cover regularly	• Schedule daily planning time next to non-instructional blocks that can be covered by support staff once per week, such as small group instruction, lunch/recess, community circle, and/or arrival/dismissal to create time for an extended block once per week. • Can be temporary or part-time staff (see Appendix for note on part-time staff in this moment).
Extend enrichment time on one day	• Increase enrichment time for coverage or redistribute existing individual planning time to create an extended block once per week for professional learning and collaboration.
Hire a floating teacher	• Hire a multi-grade floating science or social studies teacher who provides coverage for professional learning and collaboration time; stack with enrichment block to create an extended-release block for teachers. • Also increases individual planning time for teachers.

Opportunities for expanding teacher leader roles

Teacher-leader roles should be designed to include...

Time built into schedules for

- Leading weekly planning meetings for core subject teachers* in shared-course teams or in one-on-one meetings where only one teacher teaches a course.*
- Planning for collaborative planning meetings*
At least as much time for planning as is spent attending meetings*
- Observing and providing feedback to all teachers in their caseload at least once every two weeks
- Weekly leadership team meetings (including meetings with other teacher leaders and the principal)

See Leap Leader at DC Public Schools for an example

There are different options for providing flexible supports in secondary schools

	Create a Flexible “What I Need” Block	Double-Dose Courses
	Create a schoolwide Flex Block when all students can receive support in the areas needed most	Offer small group instruction or structured tutoring as an elective-type option in place of study hall or other electives for some students
Scheduling 	- Academic support happens outside of existing periods - Requires shortening or reducing number of periods and transition times - Length and frequency of supports can vary	- Academic support happens during existing periods - Requires repurposing an existing period for some students - Length and frequency of supports are the same as other courses
Staffing 	- Typically all-hands-on-deck - May impact teacher utilization and number of preps defined in teacher contract - Can leverage external partners to staff supports	- May require more staff if intending to reduce group size - May impact teacher utilization and number of preps defined in teacher contract - Can leverage external partners to staff supports

Providing flexible supports in secondary schools can be challenging but there are strategies that can help

Common Challenges	How Flex Blocks and Double-Dose May Overcome These Challenges
There is limited flexibility for supports in my current schedule - how do I build flexibility to support students within the school day?	• Flex blocks generally take place outside the current schedule’s constraints (with a tradeoff in minutes from current periods) • Double-dose courses are scheduled into an existing period of a student’s day
It’s tough to navigate staff assignments not clearly defined in the teacher contract	• Depending on how flex blocks are structured and framed, adding them may require special staff agreement • Double-dose courses are assigned within the normal schedule and do not represent additional duties (though it may require staffing shifts, e.g., additional math sections in place of electives)
There is a limited supply of external partners for academic supports	• Using an “all-hands-on-deck” approach allows for implementing flex blocks without relying on external partners • Double-dose courses do not generally rely on external partners for delivery • Support blocks could be staggered throughout the day to leverage tutors across many students/classes
My students need to receive sufficient instructional hours to earn credits	• Flex blocks can usually be added while preserving required minutes • Double-dose courses often award elective credits to students to support credit accumulation • Schedule types with more periods (e.g., 8 vs. 7 periods) can make more space for delivering supports like double-dosing while also prioritizing time for students to earn required credits

District Example: At this high school, students get additional support & enrichment during a twice-weekly Flex Block

- Who: All students and all staff
- What: Flex Block when students have agency in which activities they participate in, like academic intervention and/or SEL support. Students choose one Flex Block activity on Tuesday and another on Thursdays
- When: 40 minutes, twice per week
- How: Students take all 7 courses on Mondays; on Wednesdays/Fridays students take 4 courses on a block schedule; on Tuesdays/Thursdays, students take the remaining 3 courses on a block schedule and have time for Flex Blocks and Community Time; Students are scheduled into Flex Blocks using Responsive Scheduling in Infinite Campus
- Staffing: As an innovation school, teachers have expanded duties which cover participation in Flex Block, in addition to other instructional duties

“After having the Flex Block for a few years, teachers really see its value and utilize the time for intervention for students who need more support. They don't see it as a separate prep.” – Stacy Parrish, Principal of Northeast Early College
