THE JAMES AND MARYANN BULGER MEMORIAL
SCHOLARSHIP

Everyone has their own strengths and weaknesses and everyone brings something unique to the table, but for some reason in today's society, especially in the school setting, many nice people are overlooked and under-appreciated. Provide an example of someone that you may have avoided because they were weird or different but as you got a chance to know them, realized that they were worth getting to know better and what you learned from that experience. What did this realization teach you about your own character? What do you wish you would have done differently and how will this change how you treat people in the future?
