DIRECTOR'S NOTE:

Mrs. White

When the lights come up and the curtains open on the stunning Victorian mansion created by John Sierra and his stage craft students, I am brought back to my youth, playing the board game Clue with my cousins on a rainy afternoon. I come from a family of performers, so we would often make the game into a play in our living room.

It has been a joy to work with the talented students both on and off the stage to give life to a nostalgic part of so many of our childhood memories. I am proud of the growth of our program in the past year, much of which wouldn't have been possible without incredible student initiative and leadership. I truly hope you enjoy the performance as much as I have enjoyed having the opportunity to guide this incredibly talented group of young people.

TECHNICAL DIRECTOR'S NOTE:

Mr. Sierra

As we were brainstorming ideas for our next production in this wonderful new theater, the idea of Clue met instant approval. With all the rooms and hidden passageways, we knew it would be a major construction project. I was fortunate to have a creative and motivated crew during our first-ever summer StageCraft program.

For 10 days, we brainstormed set designs and got a jumpstart on construction. I am so grateful for all the students who offered their artistic talents and eagerness to help build. I would like to express special appreciation to Josh's dad, Sean Gray, for his generous time and effort in getting us through some of the toughest hurdles with this construction! We certainly hope you appreciate the craftsmanship of this stage and enjoy the murder mystery as it unfolds before you. Thank you Mrs. White for your unwavering dedication and amazing ability to manage so many students with compassion, grace and kindness. You bring out the best in all of us!
