Background

Since 2003, hundreds of students have successfully completed the Day Treatment Program. Many of these students have returned to their home schools and have been successful in the classroom. Others have completed a GED or high school diploma and have made positive contributions in the work environment. In addition to success in the classroom and community, Day Treatment students are monitored for additional legal problems and can be required to return to Day Treatment to receive additional treatment.

Day Treatment is limited to 30 students. Students generally stay between six to twelve months, with the average stay being seven and a half months. The staff consists of eight including a director, two mental health counselors, two teachers, an instructional assistant, a recreational therapist, and an office manager.

Warren County Schools offer this excellent opportunity for treatment and education through a partnership with the Kentucky Department of Juvenile Justice, Kentucky Educational Collaborative for State Agency Children program, and the Title 1 Subpart D program.

Day Treatment follows the Warren County Schools schedule except in the summer. During the summer, an additional thirty-three days are added to the Warren County school calendar.

"Day Treatment teaches you discipline and respect for others and yourself."

Program Description

Warren County Day Treatment provides youth and their families with community based services that focus on the prevention of delinquency. Services are provided to approximately 30 students between the ages of twelve and eighteen.

Day Treatment offers community based treatment and education for youth experiencing behavioral difficulties, court adjudicated juvenile offenders, as well as youth transitioning back into the community from a more restrictive setting. The Day Treatment Program provides opportunities that promote growth and development. The program also encourages each student to reach their potential by promoting positive socialization within the school, community, and home.

Program services are provided as an alternative to residential treatment. Day Treatment is a Warren County School, which has comprehensive educational and clinical resources including: educational and psychological evaluations, family and group counseling, classroom education, and GED preparation.

"Day Treatment gave me a new start and let me learn from my mistakes. Now I can succeed in life."

Expectations

Warren County Day Treatment operates on the "Phase System" of behavior modification. Completion of each five phases is determined by the accumulation of points that rewards positive achievement with increased privileges and provides logical consequences for inappropriate behaviors. Students are encouraged to modify unacceptable behavior in an environment that supports positive change. As students move through the five phases they continue to learn positive behaviors and increase success in performance. Program completion prepares the student to be released from daily program attendance to return to public school or employment.

As a community based treatment program, family involvement and counseling are important components of the program. Student progress in the program is discussed with the family. Students and families work together to develop common goals. Family involvement is facilitated through home visits, telephone contacts, progress reports, treatment team meetings, and collateral therapy.

Warren County Day Treatment has a zero tolerance policy for violence, fighting, and threatening behavior. If a student engages in terroristic threatening, threats of violence, fighting, or other types of defiant behavior, the program director will take appropriate action.

Day Treatment is a highly structured program with specific behavioral expectations. Students are required to wear uniforms, keep conversations appropriate, and follow staff directions. Day Treatment does not tolerate unexcused absences or tardies. Day Treatment students will not be involved in horseplay, profanities, or touching. All students in the Day Treatment are subject to random searches and drug tests.
