[Dr. Cameron Hewett] Well, it's been quite a transition, going from my fourth year of medical school to being an intern. There's a lot of new responsibilities, but it's been a pretty nice environment. I feel like I've been well mentored by the upper level residents. There's always someone I can talk to whenever I have questions, and I really feel like I've noticed a lot of	Young man in dark scrubs with red hair and beard in front of staircase with LSU Health Shreveport logo at the top Text: Cameron Hewett, MD 1st Year Resident personal growth. The opportunity to be like involved in	Computer monitor with head CT scan. Finger pointing to colored structures in the brain Treatment and get to have a lot more autonomy is	Hand holding small, blue, hand sized brain reproduction. A pen points at an area while a lady in glasses in the background motions really helpful to like growing into being an	Professor at a podium lecturing to a group of residents sitting at tables in a conference attending physician one day.	Dr. Hewett in conference at a desk typing on a computer [Dr. Alexa Dustin] It's going pretty good, and I've had opportunities to be alone on a team with an attending and learned a lot through that. And also work with Co-residents and get to know people here. So, it's been pretty good. I'm learning a lot. [Music] [Dr. Payton Mangham] Second year is awesome.	Purple background with text that says Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Medicine --- Second Year

It's a big step up in responsibility from intern year. You get to start leading a lot of teams.	Female resident sitting in clinic hall talking with a male medical student wearing a white coat
You have a lot more influence and input, within the treatment decisions for different patients. As well as supervising your junior level residents,	Fair, male resident with sparse beard at bottom of stairway with the LSU Health Shreveport logo at the top of the stairs Text: Payton Mangham, MD 2 nd Year Resident you also get to help lead teaching more with medical students.	Male faculty member with medium complexion at white board as a group of mixed residents and medical students look on Overall, it's really a great opportunity to start feeling more like an attending as you're given a little bit more freedom	Dr. Payton Mangham on camera in same location as before and responsibility, even though at times it can be a little scary. But it's a great opportunity.	Light complected female resident in white coat outside discussing a file with a young fair man with a beard wearing a black t-shirt
[Dr. Laura Handal] During second year, although it's a little challenging for us, you will create more autonomy and independence and that will help not only your clinical skills, but also your medication management and confidence with patients. [Music] [Dr. Gina Parsons] Being a third year resident	Purple background with text Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Medicine --- Third Year at LSU Health Shreveport is an amazing experience.	Platinum blonde at computer looking at brain CT scan
You get to work in the outpatient clinic setting.	Young medium complected male doctor standing and talking to a group of residents and students who are seated in a clinic hallway
You get to do full psychiatric evaluations with	Male physician sitting a desk talking to a woman facing him
outpatients, as well as progress notes.	Tighter shot of same male smiling
You follow your patients for the entire year, which is a very rewarding experience. Getting to know them and helping them through both therapy and medication management. [Dr. D. Wayne Smith] The third year is pretty much 12 months of consistent clinical exposure.	Male faculty member with medium complexion walking down a hall surrounded by a mixed group of residents and medical students
We see everything. Shreveport has a really diverse population, which is great because we really get to see things not just that we would normally see in the inpatient unit, but in outpatient we get to see personality disorder, eating disorders, sleeping disorders, just everything. What also we get really good at in third year is knowing what interactions are with certain prescriptions and being able to know this is good for this, this isn't good for this. So I think it really hones your skills where you understand not only that psychiatry	Young male faculty member standing in clinic hall, talking with a female resident and two medical students who are seated is an inpatient reality, but also	Side shot of a fair, male physician sitting a desk very, very much the meat of the specialty is actually outpatient.	Wide shot of same physician talking with an older female seated beside corner of the desk
[Music] [Dr. Huy Do] We get a lot of independence.	Purple background with text Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Medicine --- Fourth Year
We do acting attending rotation, where we're running our own teams. And overall, it's out of all the years is probably the most chill.	Light complected male resident in dark scrubs leaning against a glass railing overlooking stairs with a large LSU Health Logo Text: Huy Do, MD 4 th Year Resident
[Dr. Sarah Kaufman] It's a great place to train because we see a lot of really sick patients, and you get very comfortable handling very severe cases. By the time you're done training at LSU, you're typically ready	Platinum blonde female resident with glasses in hallway with large LSU Health Shreveport logo on the wall behind her Text: Sarah Kaufman, MD 4 th year Resident for attending hood and just easily can handle whatever comes your way.	Male resident with a mustache seated at a table talking with male and female medical students.

[Dr. Huy Do] So I feel like this program's prepared me really well. One of the things I liked about this program is that we're a safety net hospital.	Dr. Do in same location as before
We serve a very large geographical area. We see like a large spectrum	Logoed sign on Louisiana Behavioral Health building of different severities and so I think we're really well prepared for the future.	Dr. Do seated on a couch next to a male faculty member
