What is Personalized Learning?

Personalized learning refers to the design of a student's instruction being a "contract" between teacher and student. It is truly personalized learning. For each subject area to be studied, the teacher and student design a learning plan for how the student will complete a course of study. The learning plan, designed with input from the student about their passions and interests, includes the details of what the student will work on.

Personalized learning is independent and self-paced. It may include online resources, but it does not necessarily include an online component. Students in the personalized learning program receive weekly one-on-one instructional support from a certificated teacher. Students may also have access to lab time, where they come on campus to access additional support in the form of tutoring, counseling, or access to computers and a quiet study place. Students with discipline will not be eligible to access additional on-site supports, but may access distance learning support.

What Students Learn

Each student plan is made up of individualized, independent study classes, combining print, digital, and community resources. What subject areas, and how many are included depends entirely on the individual student's goals, interests and their unique situation. Students in grades 9-12 earn high school credit for completing their courses.

When do students attend campus?

Each week PL students meet with their advisor for a 1 on 1 check in AND attend 1 study session per week. In rare circumstances arrangements can be made for 100% distance learning .

WHY Personalized Learning? Who is it for?

Personalized Learning at Sky Valley Education Center is open to secondary students in grades 9-12. Students come from a variety of backgrounds and situations.

This learning style often appeals to students who...

- Have not experienced success or are not comfortable in the traditional school setting
- Learn best independently
- Want to make up credits or explore alternative educational options
- Are looking for a one-on-one learning environment rather than a classroom setting
- Want to be able to explore their unique interests and passions through their school experience
