History of Barbie

AJ Lavigne

The history of Barbie started with an idea from the business woman Ruth Handler, which was later created by Mattel and introduced to the world on March 9th, 1959, which is the day that Barbie Day is celebrated.

The doll was based on a European toy, Bild Lilli, who was originally a toy adults would buy. But later, kids started playing with Lilli and would dress her up in outfits. The doll is named after Ruth Handler's child, Barbara, which is shortened to Barbie.

The first style of Barbie was her wearing a zebra-patterned swimsuit. The sales of Barbie dolls were 350,000+ and at the time, Mattel couldn't keep up. Mattel was sued in 1961 by the company who created Lilli, but the situation was settled in 1963 and Mattel bought said company's patent and copyright rights for Lilli in 1964.

Mattel has made many Barbie movies, games, and shows to advertise Barbie dolls, and the most recent movie released was the live action movie Barbie, starring Margot Robbie as the original Barbie and Ryan Gosling as the original Ken, released in 2023.
