Directions For Use:

Game 1: What Do You Do?

Slides 3-6Black and white version included on slides 3-4

Prep: Choose whether you want students to play in groups or whole class. If you have table groups, you might want to play in those. Make copies of either the colored set or black and white (they're the same). You can also use the blank game boards as well if you'd like (not included in freebie). You can laminate the cards and game boards (game boards not included in freebie) if you'd like, and then cut out the cards. Each group/partnership should get their own set of cards and a board (if you choose). There are 8 question cards altogether (bundle includes 12). You can also store these cards in baggies or envelopes.

How to Play: Turn all question cards over, so players can't see the questions. If playing with game board—First student turns over a question card. If he/she answers the question, he/she gets to roll the die and move ahead. This continues with the rest of the group. If playing without a game board, simply have students take turns turning over a question card and answering it out loud with their team or partner.

Take It a Step Further: Have students role play each card to really put themselves in the given situation. You can even play as a class, and call up several students at a time to role play.

You walk into the restroom,
and you hear
someone in the bathroom
stall crying.

What do you do?

You're hanging out with a group of friends, and a student walks up to your group to join in. One of your friends makes a rude comment to that student,
and so they leave. What do you do?

While walking home from School, you witness a physical fight. Your friend tells you to record it with your cell phone. What do you do?

As you walk to class, you see a boy knock a kid's books out of his hands.
You've seen him do this several other times.

What do
you do?

You walk up to a group of popular kids, and they're telling stories about another student's family. These stories are not nice, and you know they're not true. What do you do?

You walk around the corner and hear someone threatening to beat up another student if that student tells on him. What do you do?

Online, you notice a group of kids ganging up on a girl calling her all sorts of mean names. This girl doesn't have many friends and is different from most kids. What do you do?

In class, two girls keep laughing at another student because she's having trouble reading. Later on, you notice this student is really upset. What do you do?

Suggestions for Use

Slides 2-6: What Do You Do Card Game: This game puts students in different scenarios and situations in which they're asked the question, "What do you do?" Many have to do with bullying, being a bystander, witnessing something bad, etc. This can be played in small groups, or even as a whole class as students must make a choice to do the right thing. The first two pages of cards are in black and white, but the pictures are in color. The second two pages are in color. I did this because I know we don't all have color printers, and even if we do, we don't always want to use our colored ink. Page 2 lists the prep, supplies needed, and how to play.

Slide 7-8: Anti Bullying Ribbon– Students will design their very own ribbon for others to wear in honor of standing up to bullying using the Depth and Complexity/Content Imperatives icons. Maybe you could even hold a contest! Slide 8 gives the same directions without asking students to use the Depth and Complexity icons and Content Imperatives in case you'd like to do the activity without these prompts.

This is part of a larger bundle with 50 more pages! It features two more pages of "What Do You Do?" cards and 16 more activities.
