When California is dry, we're all in a drought

Whatever fruits and vegetables you put on your plate, chances are good that you're eating produce from California. That's why the long-lasting drought in California affects everyone, all over the United States. This map shows the extent of the drought as of the 10th of April 2025 -- and we're pretty much at the end of the California rain and snow season.

Percentages of U.S. production that comes from California:

Walnuts 99%	Garlic 95%
Almonds 99%	Strawberries 92%
Artichokes 99%	Grapes 91%
Pistachios 98%	Tomatoes 90%
Kiwis 97%	Cauliflower 89%
Plums 97%	Lettuce 74%
Broccoli 95%	Spinach 71%
Celery 95%	Carrots 69%

VEGETABLE

Corn

Among the fantastic fresh summer foods we all anticipate, fresh corn on the cob is certainly a favorite. Technically, corn is a grain, but most often we use it like a vegetable. In most parts of the U.S., fresh sweet corn season is in full swing from July through September.

OF THE MONTH

★ OUR NATION'S HISTORY ★

The LAST BATTLE of the CIVIL WAR
PALMETTO RANCH

The American Civil war did not end in April 1865 with General Lee's surrender to General Grant in Virginia. A larger Confederate army surrendered in North Carolina several weeks later. And the final battle of the bloodiest war in American history didn't take place until May 1865, 150 years ago this month, at Palmetto Ranch, Texas, near the Mexican border. Ironically, this last engagement was a victory for the Confederate forces despite their losing the war!
