That's a wrap on the 2024-25 school year!

We have much to be thankful for and proud of as we reflect on our accomplishments and begin preparing for next year. Some highlights include:

Congratulations to the Class of 2025!

This year's graduating class consisted of 552 students. Throughout the year, they excelled on the stage and court, on the field, and in our classrooms. Please join me in wishing our recent graduates much success as they embark on their post-secondary journeys.

High School Construction/Renovation Progress

We made great strides with our high school project, completing the Schematic Design phase and moving into Design Development, which will include faculty and staff workshops to gather input on specific needs for classrooms and common areas. We hosted a community forum regarding the project in April. Scan the QR code to access the presentation or visit the district's website at www.hempfieldsd.org. We will also host a second community forum this fall to update everyone on this exciting project.

Expansion of Extended Day Kindergarten (EDK)

Beginning next school year, we will offer six EDK classrooms, one at each eligible school, with a cap of 15 students per class. This expansion allows up to 90 kindergarten students to benefit from a full day of instruction with an added emphasis on literacy. While our long-term goal remains Full-Day Kindergarten (FDK) for all students, this is an important step in that direction.

Expanded Parent-Teacher Conference Opportunities

You asked, and we answered. Parents and guardians requested more check-in times with teachers, especially at the secondary level. Beginning next year, our calendar will feature K-12 parent-teacher conferences in both November and March. (See the 2025-26 calendar on page 11.)

COMMUNICATION: A KEY TO ALL DOORS

By: Anthony M. Georgelis, Esquire, HHS Class of '88

Communication is an extremely critical component to the effective practice of law. In fact, it might be the most important factor in becoming, and staying, a successful attorney. So, when I read the essay that my son, AJ, recently wrote about what he calls, "old school" communication, I thought it would be worthwhile to share and especially apropos in today's world. Here is what he had to say on the topic...

Each of us takes our own path as we strive to achieve our individual goals in life. On the journey to personal fulfillment, however, obviously, we must co-exist in a world full of other people with various, and often differing, beliefs, attitudes, priorities, opinions, and aspirations. These days, unfortunately, it seems like our differences are doing more than ever to drive us apart. This begs the questions: If society becomes irreparably divided, will it diminish the value of our individual successes? Will they hold any true meaning at all in such a place?

We are all stewards of the future and have a certain responsibility to act and create our legacy with posterity in mind. In that role, it stands to reason that most, if not all, of us believe that working toward and maintaining a world of patience, compassion, and peace is important enough for us, as human beings, to come together and make it happen. But even if we agree on the importance of this task, in today's splintering world, how do we tear down the invisible barriers that seem to separate us on so many issues?

The answer is quite simple and right in front of us—literally. It's participating in what can be referred to as "old school" communication—the type of communication that has seemingly become obsolete in today's age of e-mailing, texting, social media posting, and overall virtual interaction. "Old school" communication involves in-person, face-to-face engagement, where we look someone in the eye, we hear the inflection of their voice and put context to their words, and we properly appreciate and interpret their facial expressions and body language. It forces us to be accountable for our words by removing the ability to hide behind a cell phone or computer screen. Rather than allowing emotions to fester or become susceptible to manipulation in the intervals between virtual communications, "old school" communication breeds immediate, visceral, and organic reactions and responses between human beings.

When conducted in a dignified and respectful manner, "old school" communication is a simple mechanism allowing for the exchange of ideas and opinions. Cordial discourse, even when emotionally charged, can be an effective incubator for peace and harmony among us. While we might not agree on how things ultimately turn out, maybe we can accede to the process by which we get to that conclusion. All it takes is a common objective, that is subjectively worth fighting for, and a reasonable means by which to accomplish it. "Old school" communication does just that; it's the world's engine—a key to all doors.
