Back-To-School Information

s we begin the 2025–2026 school year, I want to extend my sincere thanks to you - our families, staff, neighbors, and local businesses - for your continued partnership and support. This past spring, your vote to renew our operating referendum at a reduced rate reaffirmed a powerful truth: strong schools make strong communities. Because of you, we can retain exceptional educators, continue investing in safety and security, and provide learning experiences that prepare every student for a successful future. We are honored by your trust and remain committed to being responsible stewards of these resources.

In the past five years, our district has experienced an extraordinary amount of change: historic investments in facilities, expanded student programs at every level, and shifting educational landscapes. Crown Point Community School Corporation has not only endured, but thrived. Thanks to our incredible teachers and staff, careful district planning, and unwavering community support, we are more future-ready than ever. Our classrooms are alive with opportunities, reflecting that when students are supported, challenged, and inspired, they achieve incredible things.

The 2024-2025 school year offered countless examples of that spirit in action. From the launch of new STEM and career-focused programs to state and national recognition for journalism, athletics, robotics, performing arts, and more, our schools were filled with moments of achievement, creativity, and pride. These successes are a direct result of the strong partnerships between educators, families, and our larger community.

While academics and achievement are important, what truly sets us apart is our sense of community. Because of you, our students have the resources, staff, and opportunities they need to thrive - not just academically, but as whole individuals. I am deeply grateful for your support and look forward to continuing our shared mission of excellence in education.

With gratitude,

Dr. Todd Terrill, Superintendent of Schools

- 1. The Class of 2025 included 746 graduates. In 2024-2025, CPHS students earned more than 5,800 Dual Credits these college credits prepare students for future studies while also saving parents thousands of dollars. CPHS students also took 1,632 Advanced Placement (AP) exams.
- 2. The launch of elementary STEM for students in grades K-5 was a success. Students completed more than 39,841 projects in SAM Labs, an online coding program. This is one of the highest for a district in the nation! The addition of 70 robotics kits means every student in grades 2-5 receives experience with VEX Robotics.
- 3. CPCSC is able to provide meaningful events, like Field Day, for our students with the help of parent and community volunteers. This year, more than 3,200 people volunteered time in our schools and during events.
- 4. This future bulldog is ready to become a member of the Royal Regiment Marching Band.
 CPCSC middle school and high school music programs received numerous awards, including All-Department Awards from ISSMA. The honor recognizes schools that demonstrate excellence across the entire spectrum of events offered by ISSMA.
- 5. Across CPCSC elementaries, Grandparents Day returned this year! Hundreds of grandparents and other special visitors joined students to experience their schools. For residents who are 62 and over, don't forget to get a free CPCSC event pass to attend games, performances, and other events (see page 9 for more info)!

ost students don't begin their school day in a suit and tie, or with camera-ready hair and makeup. But for seniors Ryan Welsh and Ari Pantoja, they're dressed in their best before 7:30 in the morning. That's because they're about to be today's on-air anchors for CPHS's Crown Town Media. Crown Town Media (home to Excalibur yearbook, Inklings newspaper, CPTV Broadcasting, and Dog Radio) are producing some of the most impactful and decorated student journalism in the state.

At the heart of this student-led operation is more than just a drive for awards. It's a commitment to storytelling, teamwork, and the kind of collaboration that prepares students not just for a newsroom, but for life.

"We're not here to convince anyone to become a broadcaster," says Chris Gloff, one of the instructors for the radio and TV program. "We're here to help them develop confidence, leadership, writing and speaking skills - and to find their voice."

Students join journalism for a variety of reasons. For MiRey Fernandez, it started as a gut decision. "I joined this class my freshman year after deciding to choose it over culinary," he said. "The skills I've learned from broadcasting class don't only apply to student journalists. We were taught about teamwork and unity from day one. A goal of this program is to help students find their voice—whether that's speaking into a microphone, communicating professionally, or standing up for yourself." Fernandez credits the program with preparing him to study journalism at Indiana University Bloomington.

The CPHS courses begin with foundational skills in Principles of Broadcasting or Photojournalism, and build to advanced electives like Mass Media Production, Digital Design, and Advanced Journalism.

Students learn to report news, create publications, anchor broadcasts, write editorials, produce shows, and publish content across platforms.

The results speak for themselves. In the last two years, CPTV and Dog Radio have earned more than 30 major awards, including a national Crystal Pillar (an Emmyaffiliated contest) for Best Newscast and top state honors from the Indiana Association of School Broadcasters. Crown Town Media's website is a two-time Hoosier Star winner, presented by the Indiana High School Press Association (IHSPA) to student media outlets that demonstrate excellence in journalism.

For senior Rana Stevens, the experience has been significant. "Broadcasting wasn't my focus at first, but it became a passion," she said. "This program helped me develop a strong work ethic and skills in anchoring, writing, editing, and broadcasting. It taught me to aim for excellence, even in the hard tasks. Now I want to study multimedia journalism in college."

Excalibur yearbook has also earned national recognition, including National Scholastic Press Association and Columbia Scholastic Press Association awards. It likewise has consecutive awards from the IHSPA. Excalibur staff work to capture the full story of the school year through creative layouts and reporting.

"The yearbook isn't just names and faces," says adviser Lisa Keene. "It's about telling the story of the school—its students, challenges, and celebrations."

Inklings, the student newspaper, has undergone a recent design overhaul, giving it a fresh, energetic look to match its voice. Students brainstorm stories, report, write, and edit, while learning media law and ethics along the way.

"We really wanted our paper to feel like us." said one student editor. "We cover stories that matter, and we're learning to do it responsibly and creatively."

Across all three programs, students build more than media skills. They become problem-solvers, collaborators, and communicators skills that will serve them wherever they go. "Our hope," says Inklings adviser Jennifer Bianchi, "is that they leave here happy, confident, and ready to lead, wherever life takes them."

From studio to newsroom, written page to webpage, Crown Town Media is more than a journalism program. It's a launchpad. And while the awards line the shelves, the students' voices remain most important.

PCSC, the needs and interests of students take center stage. From model trains to crochet, photography to brain teasers, Crown Point teachers continue to create opportunities for students to connect with their passions and with each other through unique clubs.

Railroad Club

The Railroad Club at CPHS began with a simple request from a few students who loved model trains. When they couldn't find a sponsor. two staff members who already knew the students well stepped in.

"We weren't model train people," sponsor Sandra Specker admitted. "But we knew these students, and their passion was contagious."

The club started with a single piece of plywood and personal train collections brought from home. Over time, it grew into a permanent layout in a classroom and a community-wide effort, with donations from Crown Point staff. local enthusiasts, and even an unofficial partnership with a local train store.

The club meets weekly and has developed a rhythm of "build days" and "run days." On build days, students work together on projects like creating a mountain tunnel for the layout. On run days, the real fun begins: operating their trains, trading tips, and enjoying one another's company. The club is open to all students - no train sets or prior knowledge required.

Field trips are also part of the club experience. Students have traveled to the Monon Connection Museum and Whistle Stop Cafe, which houses the largest private collection of railroad items shared with the public in the United States.

"In a school of over 3,000 students, they found their people," sponsor Mary Rhee said. "More than anything, we want them to build friendships."

Photography Club

At Eisenhower Elementary, a love of creativity is at the heart of Photography Club. Teacher Amanda Alliss saw a need for a nonacademic outlet and recognized that not all students thrive in traditional clubs.

"I've always loved photography, and I wanted to offer something for kids who needed a creative space," she said. "The response was incredible."

With support from the PTO and parents, the club raised money for DSLR cameras and began offering lessons. Students learn camera basics, technical skills, and artistic composition, all while receiving encouragement from peers.

The club culminates each year with a "photo walk," where students showcase their work in the school library. "They're so proud," Alliss said. "And they should be. They're learning how to see the world differently and how to express that with confidence."

Crochet Club

At Timothy Ball Elementary, creativity takes the form of yarn and hooks in the school's Crochet Club, sponsored by teacher Michelle Way. The idea for the club actually came from a fifth-grade student, and Way immediately volunteered to lead it along with her mother, who taught her to crochet.

"Watching the students' creativity and confidence grow each week has been inspiring," Way said.

Open to fourth and fifth graders, the club begins with basics like singlechain stitches before progressing to more challenging techniques. Students have made everything from water bottle sleeves and coasters to scrunchies, pandas, and even a crocheted rose with a sewn stem for Mother's Day.

What began as a simple craft has become a way for students to learn perseverance, develop fine motor skills, and find joy in creating something with their own hands.

Thinkers' Club

For students who enjoy puzzles, strategy, and brain teasers, the Thinkers' Club at Taft Middle School offers the perfect escape. Led by teacher Chris Manley, the club meets twice a month and features board games, riddles, logic puzzles, and even mini-escape rooms.

"Relationships are key to having a fun and successful educational experience," Manley said. "This club gives students a chance to challenge their minds while making friends along the way."

The Thinkers' Club has created a niche for students who enjoy thinking outside the box, offering games and experiences they may not typically encounter during the school day. The focus is on fun, respectful engagement, and building community.

Opportunities as Unique as Students

These clubs, and many others across the district, exist because teachers saw something in their students and responded.

At Taft Middle School, students in the Bulldog Millionaire Investment Club are learning how to manage real investments. Topics include understanding stocks and mutual funds, retirement planning options, real estate investing, and other options such as art and collectibles. The goal is to give students real experience of managing a portfolio and understanding the importance of financial discipline and long term savings.

In the Crafts for Charity Club, students make blankets, cards, and lanyards for shelters and service members.

Each club reflects the same quiding principle: that every student deserves a place where their interests are celebrated, they can connect with peers, and their potential can flourish.

his fall, Crown Point High School will officially add girls flag football and girls lacrosse to its list of high school athletic programs. These sports are recent additions to the Indiana High School Athletic Association's (IHSAA) "emerging sports" initiative which is designed to help schools respond to rising student interest and increase participation in new activities.

Emerging sports are those that are growing in popularity and may eventually become fully sanctioned IHSAA sports. Schools that offer them are part of a pilot-style phase, helping gather data and build support across the state. The addition of these sports at CPHS is part of high school level, and it was recently added to the 2028 Olympic Games.

"I'm really looking forward to coaching this future group of students and developing new skills and a love for the game," said coach and CPHS teacher Gabrielle Argenta. "Launching a flag football program is a great opportunity to introduce more female athletes to the importance of teamwork, stepping outside of your comfort zone and creating a fun, competitive environment that helps everyone grow. These young ladies will help build a strong foundation for the future of flag football at CPHS."

"We're excited to offer two new sports that students asked for and are excited about," said Bill Dorulla, athletic director at Crown Point High School. "Flag football especially is a new way for students to experience the game in a school setting, and our connection with the Colts gives the program a strong foundation."

More than 20,000 girls now play high school lacrosse across the United States. A group of Crown Point students and families expressed local interest in taking the sport from a community team to a school activity, and this fall marks the program's first official season as a school team. Boys lacrosse will continue to operate as a community club in Crown Point, a decision made by their program leaders to best fit their current needs and schedule.

Crown Point Schools believes in supporting a wide range of student interests so every student can find their place and feel connected. You can find a schedule of games and updates through the season for these new teams at www.crownpointathletics.com.

62+ Activity Pass

Residents age 62 and older of Center and Winfield Townships will be admitted to home student extracurricular and school corporation sponsored activities with a valid activity pass. This does not include post-season athletic contests.

A 62+ Pass from the district is available at the Administration Building at 1050 S. Main St. Bring a photo ID that shows your in-district address.

CPCSC SAFETY TIPLINE

Call or text: 219-306-8063 Email: 1789@alert1.us https://cps-k12-in.safeschoolsalert.com In May, Taft Middle School held its annual military appreciation event, which this year featured a meaningful piece of history from the former Taft campus. Last summer, CPCSC administration received an email from a community member to address the condition of a Vietnam memorial at the old Taft site. Upon investigation, it was discovered the memorial was installed in 1994 by Taft teachers Carol Borowski and Jim Saksa, along with their students, to honor 16 Crown Point men who gave their lives in service to our country. At that time, students researched each individual, planted trees and tulips, and held a ceremony in their memory.

Over the years, the small memorial—located near Main Street—became largely unknown, even to some local veteran leaders. To restore its visibility and honor, CPCSC worked with Mr. Saksa, Mrs. Borowski, and representatives from the Crown Point American Legion Post 20 to determine how best to preserve and relocate it. Today, the memorial sits prominently beside the Taft Middle School flagpole. Thanks to Mrs. Borowski, CPCSC digitized the photos and papers she kept to ensure better records of this important project.

During this year's event, Taft students learned about the 16 individuals listed and placed flags to pay their respects. CPCSC is proud to once again make this memorial part of Taft's tradition. Community members who wish to visit this memorial can find it at the front of the Taft building, located at 5235 E. 121st Ave.

The men listed on the memorial include:

William Ahart James Blevins Richard Ellsworth David Hammett Matthew Renner

Preston Winland

David Baum Robert Brix Gerald Fiegle Thomas Hoeckelberg

Bruce Staehli

Robert Biegel David Dluzak Daryl Grothaus James Pintar Ronald Van Sessen
