C.E.S. SERVICES

Executive Searches

We at C.E.S. know that selecting a superintendent is one of the most important responsibilities a Board of Education undertakes. For this reason, we have developed a comprehensive, four-phase approach to executive searches.

Phase I: Research

The first step in hiring a new leader is to identify the attributes that leader must possess in order to be successful in a specific district. CES has created and used a protocol for research to develop a profile of attributes for a new superintendent. Our goal is to establish the characteristics that will guide a district's search.

Phase II: Recruitment

Our team utilizes an unparalleled database of nearly 13,000 emails of current administrators in the Northeast to find candidates that meet the unique needs of the school district. CES has been serving Connecticut's school districts in Fairfield County for more than 40 years. Our reputation as the primary agency for educational resources and support will lead to a stronger, more diversified pool of candidates.

Phase III: Selection

The profile guides the screening of applications for interview. The profile also guides the structure of interview questions. Through the duration of the selection process, the Board of Education plays a central role. The Board makes the decisions regarding candidates and the appointment of a new leader.

Phase IV: Transition

Once a new leader has been appointed, the CES Team will continue to assist the district in the transition of leadership. CES will work with the newly hired executive to develop an entry plan, and will meet with the Board within four months after hiring to assess the status of transition.

Open Choice

The Open Choice program was established by legislation in 1997 to reduce racial, ethnic, and economic isolation and improve academic achievement among students. Through the Open Choice program, students living in urban areas have the opportunity to apply to attend school in participating suburban school districts when space is available.

School Planning, Enrollment Analysis and Redistricting

CES offers school enrollment analysis and school redistricting services for districts!

Our consultants, Michael Zuba and Pat Gallagher, utilize population and growth forecasting in combination with state-of-the-art computerized data analysis to meet a variety of needs including long-range facility planning and school redistricting for several schools and districts throughout Connecticut.

Factors in School Planning

- Population projection is central to our forecasting activities. We use computational techniques such as the cohort survival method, which is widely employed by the State Department of Education for short-term school projections. In addition, land use and economic-based techniques are used in some projects.
- Residential development findings are applied to the school planning process. Build-out and growth forecasts, incorporating existing zoning and environmental constraints, provide essential information for policy-making and are a standard element of our municipal development plans. Development analysis and age cohort forecasting supply a wide range of community data.
- Geographic Information System (GIS) software enables us to conduct comprehensive geodemographic analysis. The extraction and projection of demographic information within school districts or other user-identified boundaries afford quick, cost-efficient computational capability. We can address-match school locations, new births and the existing school population, which allow easy relational analysis among designated variables.
