Course Syllabus 2025 - 2026

A. Course: Theatre Arts III

B. Department: Fine Arts

C. Course Description: We want for all of our students to drive improvement in the system that delivers that learning. Standards, therefore, should embody the key concepts, processes and traditions of study in each subject area, and articulate the aspirations of those invested in our schools—students, teachers, administrators, and the community at large. With this explanation in mind, these standards were built the framework of the NCAS which is built on four key domains: Creating, Performing/Presenting/Producing, Connecting, and Responding. Within each of these domains are foundations and standards to support the development of curriculum, programs, and learning in dance. By keeping the domains and foundations of the NCAS, there is continuity not only across fine arts in Tennessee, but also across the US. Each domain houses standards for each grade level through grade 8; then, standards for varying levels of dance and theatre proficiency in high school: beginner (HS1), intermediate (HS2), advanced (HS3), and pre-professional (HS4). There are instances where the standards between (HS3) and (HS4) look similar at each level. In these instances, the underlying concepts should increase in rigor from year to year. This framework allows for greater teacher flexibility while also increasing rigor in the discipline and keeping many of the positive elements from the original Tennessee state standards. Overall, this updated set of standards is designed for teacher flexibility. Teachers are the best judges of how to plan, build, implement, assess, and differentiate instruction. Teachers have access to and support from a variety of resources and should be able to use those resources in the way they see fit to best facilitate their instruction. These standards are purposefully broad for the sake of district curriculum development. Tennessee is a broad and diverse state with many cultures, practices, and values. It is important that every district be given autonomy to design a curriculum that is authentic to their population.

D. Course Calendar:

* The standards will be taught out of sequence for students to better ascertain an understanding of the instructional material.
