

Employee Name: _____

The retirement laws for public employees in Massachusetts impose limitations on post-retirement earnings from the Commonwealth, or any of its subdivisions [G.L. c. 32 § 91(b) & (c)]. The limitations apply to all persons retired from the public sector in Massachusetts who are receiving a retirement allowance, both superannuation and disability retirees.

Post-retirement employment cannot exceed service in excess of 1,200 hours in a calendar year, nor can any compensation from a city, town, the Commonwealth, or any of its subdivisions, when added to a retiree's retirement allowance, exceed the salary currently being paid for the position from which he/she retired, plus $15,000. For new superannuation retirees, a full calendar year of retirement must have passed prior to the $15,000 being added into the formula calculation. For disability retirees, the $15,000 is added to the formula immediately upon retirement.

If the earnings exceed the amount allowed, the retiree shall return to the appropriate treasurer or person responsible for the payment of compensation all earnings in excess of the allowable amount. The amount of any excess not returned may be recovered in an action in contract by the treasurer or person responsible for the payment of the compensation to the retiree.

Adherence to the post-retirement restrictions in any calendar year is the statutory responsibility of the employee and the employer. It is the retiree's responsibility to keep track of his/her earnings.
