Class of 2026: The One Thing SENIORS Should Do Right Now: Apply for Scholarships

Having enough financial aid might be the difference between a student going to college or choosing not to enroll. In the era of high college tuition and more college debt, students should maximize their potential scholarship earnings.

To do this, your seniors should apply for:

- National Scholarships
- Local Scholarships
- College Scholarships

National Scholarships

Your students' scholarship search can begin on the web, where there is an abundance of resources. For example, Fastweb is a resource that uses a national database to match your students' unique characteristics to scholarships best suited for them.

There are many more tools out there connecting students to scholarships if they simply search for them.

Local Scholarships

Then encourage your students to apply for local scholarships. These can be found through the community, religious organizations, local companies, etc.

A lot of students miss out on attaining local scholarships, because they are focused on the national scholarships. Local scholarships could be low-hanging fruit for your seniors because less students usually compete for these compared to national scholarships.

College Scholarships

When your seniors apply for admissions, they'll also be applying for that college or university scholarships. But, your students should contact the colleges and universities where they're applying to find additional scholarships.
