

Gender Diversity at Bryn Mawr

The Bryn Mawr School opened its doors in 1885 with a bold vision to educate girls and young women at a time when such opportunities were often available only to boys and men. In keeping with the mission of the school, Bryn Mawr is dedicated to nurturing the full potential of all young women in mind, body and spirit. As our understanding of gender continues to expand beyond the binary definitions of girl and boy to a more inclusive spectrum of gender identities and expressions, Bryn Mawr considers for admission all students who identify as girls and would benefit from an educational environment focused on girls. Should a current student no longer identify as a girl, the school will continue to support the child and the family as they navigate any challenges that may arise from being a transgender or non-binary student in a girls' school, assuming the student shares in the school's mission. Bryn Mawr will remain current on best practices and will provide support based on the emotional, social, and academic needs of each student.
