While students are not required to test, testing is the only way that students can earn potential college credit. Tests are scored on a scale of 1 - 7; typically colleges grant credit for scores of 4 or higher. HL courses tend to earn more college credit than SL courses.

There is a misconception that SL courses will not earn college credit. While many private colleges do not, there are many institutions, including the Minnesota State College and University system, that do.

How much credit is received varies by college, but at the University of Minnesota, a score of 5 or higher on the English HL test will allow a student to earn eight credits. At Mankato State, or any other state school, a score of 4 or higher on the English SL test will allow a student to earn 2 credits. Currently, the cost for one credit at the University of Minnesota is over $620. At Mankato State, the cost for one credit is $352. With an IB registration fee of $55, testing could potentially be a cost-savings decision down the road.
