[Michon] I'm Michon Revader, and I got interested in the respiratory therapy profession pretty early on. My father was diagnosed with tongue cancer. And he had a artificial airway or trach, placed in his throat. I helped my mother care for that in the afternoons when I came home from school. And I remember her telling me the story about how, his nurse Joy helped saved his life. He was having trouble breathing, and she came in and helped him breathe. I found out later that she was not a nurse. She was a respiratory therapist, and I got interested in the field from that point. I graduated in 2003, so about 16 or 17 years of doing respiratory therapy. I have treated, every patient from the littlest, the neonates in the I C U, to adults in the E R in a level one trauma center, as well as the critical care unit. I've always loved having students come through and showing them the book knowledge they learn and how it applies to the bedside. And now that I am an instructor for about a year now, it's nice to bring those stories to the classroom and helped help them, understand what they learned and how it applies to real life situations. In my spare time, my son is a huge Marvel fan. So we watch a lot of Marvel movies, as well as sports.	Medium complected woman with straight, reddish tinted, shoulder length hair wearing a light colored blouse in lobby of School of Health Professions and Sciences Text: Michon Revader, D H A, R R T Clinical Assistant Professor, Cardiopulmonary Science
