Davies psychology students have teamed up in groups to put brains on the menu at the Zombie Café on Thursday. The student groups have created restaurant storefronts and menus serving every zombie's favorite meal. The project showcases the students' knowledge of the brain and its functions.

The restaurants will be presented together in a project fair atmosphere with the students sharing information they have researched about the human brain. Each restaurant will feature a poster board with facts and information about the human brain as well as the offerings of their eerie eateries.

The psychology class has invited all adults in the building to visit their zombie café, but due to space restrictions, other classes will not be able to attend. Snacks and refreshments will be served, but no real brains will be eaten.
