This month in preschool:

Our Monthly theme this is:

Insects

We will discover:

This month we will be "bugging out" with our new insect study! The children will be fascinated by the world of six-legged creatures, and their curiosity to some incredible discoveries.

Why an insect study is important-

- Encourages scientific thinking: Observing the details of a caterpillar or watching an ant colony at work helps children develop early scientific skills like observation, questioning, and critical thinking.
- Fosters a love of nature: By exploring the tiny world of insects, children connect with the natural world around them. This builds an appreciation for nature and teaches them to respect all living things.
- Develops empathy: Learning that insects have important jobs to do in the environment—like how bees pollinate flowers and ants clean up waste—can help children build empathy and replace fear with kindness.
- Teaches important life lessons: A study of a butterfly's metamorphosis is a beautiful illustration of change and transformation. Watching how ants work together in a colony provides a powerful lesson about teamwork and cooperation.
