Dear Lagway Parents and Families,

As we move forward this year, I want to take a moment to thank you for the tremendous support you provide at home. Your commitment to your child's education strengthens the work we do each day, and we are truly grateful for the value you place on learning and growth. Our campus continues to keep a strong focus on high-quality instruction, and we see the difference your partnership makes. Recently, however, we have observed an increase in students struggling with conflict resolution. We are working closely with them to understand that disagreements should be handled with appropriate words rather than physical responses. Students are also being reminded that words should never be used to hurt others and that threats or harmful statements are not acceptable.

In addition, during December and January, Miss Murray will be leading lessons on body safety. These conversations are important, and we encourage you to continue discussing them at home to reinforce healthy boundaries, respectful communication, and safe choices.

Thank you again for all you do to support your child and our school community. Together, we can help our students develop the academic, social, and emotional skills they need to thrive.
