

THE OFFICIAL GUHS Christmas WISHLIST

As the holidays roll in and Mariah Carey defrosts for her annual comeback, we asked our students what they want most this Christmas. And honestly... Santa might need backup. Or maybe a therapist.

Make “6-7” a Legit Term

Middle schoolers have one very serious and totally reasonable Christmas request this year:

They want “6-7” to be a fully recognized term in the school. Yes. “6-7.”

It’s mysterious. It’s chaotic. It perfectly captures everything that is middle school brainrot.

Using “67” correctly will finally bring peace, joy, and understanding to all of humanity

Basically... Santa, they don’t just want to survive middle school...they want middle school culture changed forever.

A Little Respect, Please

Freshmen are shooting for the stars this year and asking for something very rare:

Respect.

From upperclassmen, teachers, random people in the hallway... literally anyone.

Self-respect is also on the list, but they’re willing to start small.

10

Energy. Drinks. Everywhere

Sophomores are tired. They don’t know why—they just are.

So naturally, they’re wishing for:

Energy drinks in the vending machines

Preferably ones that don’t taste like carbonated sadness, but desperation is starting to set in.

11

Permission to Cry

Ah yes, junior year.

The 11th graders don’t want gifts. They don’t want toys. They don’t even want sleep.

They just want:

To go home and cry.

Big feelings. Bigger homework load. Send tissues.

12

Sweet Freedom

Seniors are keeping it simple this year:

Graduation.

A diploma, a tassel flip, maybe a nap. Santa, if you can expedite the process, they’d appreciate it.

Bonus wish: Zero senioritis symptoms. (Unlikely)
