WHAT IS SOCIAL MEDIA?

Rather than define the term using a bunch of boring jargon that would probably only complicate things further, perhaps the best way to get a clearer understanding of it is to break it down into simpler terms. To start, let's look at each word individually.

The "social" part refers to interacting with other people by sharing information with them and receiving information from them.

The "media" part refers to an instrument of communication, like the internet (while TV, radio, and newspapers are examples of more traditional forms of media).

Okay, so from these two separate terms, we can pull a basic definition together: Social media are web-based communication tools that enable people to interact with each other by both sharing and consuming information.

Yes, it's a broad definition—but keep in mind that social media is a very broad term. This is likely as specific as we can get without veering in too much on a more specific subcategory of social media.

If you're questioning whether a particular site could be classified as social or not, try looking for at least one of these features:

User accounts: If a site allows visitors to create their own accounts that they can log into, then that's a good sign there's going to be social interaction. You can't really share information or interact with others online without doing it through a user account.

Profile pages: Since social media is all about communication, a profile page is often necessary to represent an individual. It often includes information about an individual user, like a profile photo, bio, website, feed of recent posts, recommendations, recent activity and more.

Friends, followers, groups, hashtags and so on: Individuals use their accounts to connect with other users. They can also use them to subscribe to certain forms of information.

SOCIAL MEDIA

YouTube is nothing new, but it has impacted our generation so much that even some of the biggest stars owe their careers to it. Whether you're dropping original singles or covers, the billions of views the site tracks up monthly amounts to a pretty powerful potential audience. You really never know who could end up watching your videos.

Despite the site criticism, Tori K on American Idol didn't let her me get her down. In she did her own thing and in true YouTube fashion, began making me in her bedroom.

Undoubtedly the most famous YouTube star of all time, even

HOW TO STAY SAFE ON SOCIAL MEDIA WHILE HAVING FUN

Social networking websites like MySpace, Facebook, Twitter, and Windows Live Spaces are services people can use to connect with others to share information like photos, videos, and personal messages. As the popularity of these social sites grows, so do the risks of using them. Hackers, spammers, virus writers, identity thieves, and other criminals follow the traffic.

Use caution when you click links that you receive in messages from your friends on your social website. Treat links in messages on these sites as you would links in e-mail messages.

Know what you've posted about yourself. A common way that hackers break into financial or other accounts is by clicking the "Forgot your password?" link on the account login page. To break into your account, they search such as your birthday, hometown, high school class, father's middle name, on your social networking site. If the site allows, make up your own password questions, and don't draw them from material anyone could find with a quick search. Don't trust that a message really is from whom it says it's from. Hackers can break into accounts and send messages that look like they're from your friends, but aren't. If you suspect that a message is fraudulent, use an alternate method to contact your friend to find out. This includes invitations to join new social networks.

To avoid giving away e-mail addresses of your friends, do not allow social networking services to scan your e-mail address book. When you join a new social network, you might receive an offer to enter your e-mail address and password to find out if your contacts are on the network. The site might use this information to send e-mail messages to everyone in your contact list or even everyone you've ever sent an e-mail message to with that e-mail address. Social networking sites should explain that they're going to do this, but some do not.

Type the address of your social networking site directly into your browser or use your personal bookmarks. If you click a link to your site through e-mail or another website, you might be entering your account name and password into a fake site where your personal information could be stolen.

Be selective about who you accept as a friend on a social network. Identity thieves might create fake profiles in order to get information from you. Choose your social network carefully. Evaluate the site that you plan to use and make sure you understand the privacy policy. Find out if the site monitors content that people post. You will be providing personal information to this website, so use the same criteria that you would to select a site where you enter your credit card. Think twice before you use social networking sites at work. Talk to your kids about social networking.

Henry Doyle
Manager
Michaels Arts and Crafts
37 White Street
Cambridge, MA 02140

Dear Henry Doyle,

I am interested in applying for the sales associate position at Michaels Arts and Crafts. I learned about this opening through the job search engine <http://www.snagajob.com/>. For the last six months I have been working in retail at Famous Footwear as a sales associate.

I am interested in this position because as I said earlier, I do past experience of serving as a sales associate and I am able to learn new skills quickly. I enjoy working with people. I am very helpful whenever a customer has a question. I bring positive energy into the room whenever I walk in and I always have a smile on my face.

I am very respectful, organized and outgoing. As a worker, I am eager to learn more and I always work to the best of my abilities. I would love to have the opportunity to have an interview with you and I look forward to meeting your staff and exploring the workplace itself. I think that my retail skills would be a great fit for this position. Thank you for taking the time to read this and I hope to hear from you soon. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Bryanna Rodriguez
