Dear Mr. Gregory,

I am interested in applying for the job of Digital Designer at your London Headquarters. I have recently gained an appreciation for your website and stores. I want to work for this company because I feel like I have a lot to offer.

I am capable of using Adobe Illustrator, Photoshop, and InDesign. I have been enrolled in 3 years of Creative design class at CRLS. I have a lot of interest in mens clothes and especially the brands your company sells. My design related work experience includes my participation in a number of live work contests, one of which I made Honorable Mention. I also have an interest and experience in photography.

I am respectful and can work well with others. I am accountable for my actions and am quick to fix mistakes. I think I would be a good match for your company. Thank you for your considiration.

Sincerely,

Alec Nicholson

"Outrageous, courageous, moving, ironic and true"
- The New York Times Book Review

Eddie grew up in theme-park America, on a could-be-anywhere cul-de-sac in suburban Orlando, raised by a wild family of FOB ("fresh off the boat") hustlers and hysterics from Taiwan. While his father improbably launched a series of successful seafood and steak restaurants, Eddie burned his way through American culture, defying every "model minority" stereotype along the way. He obsessed over football, fought the All-American boys who called him a chink, partied like a gremlin, sold drugs with his crew, and idolized Tupac. His anchor through it all was food—from making Southern ribs (and scoring drugs) with the Haitian cooks in his dad's restaurant to preparing traditional meals in his mother's kitchen to haunting the midnight markets of Taipei when he was shipped off to the homeland.
