

Merry Christmas & Happy Break!

As we officially hit submit on this blog post and aggressively shut our Chromebooks for the next couple of weeks, it's time to wrap up 2025, but not before we do a few shout outs...

Mrs. James somehow turned a group of students who barely function before 9 a.m. into a full choir and band concert on the 17th—and yes, it actually sounded amazing. She also sleighed it at the Humbolt Christmas concert. Festive legend behavior.

Ms. Smith stayed sweet, kind, and smiling through it all, even when we were very clearly operating on caffeine and vibes.

Ms. Lopez held it down online, answering emails, posting assignments, and reminding us that “logging off” is not the same thing as “being done.”

Mrs. Riis is back and ready to guard our stress levels, emotions, and overall sanity like the school's official protector. We'll try not to immediately test that... no promises.

We also noticed this week that Ms. Seebart fully transformed into an elf, spreading Christmas cheer everywhere she went, while Heather casually glitter-bombed the conference room like holiday sparkle is now a permanent feature.

Ms. Ross - out here literally saving lives and still showing up to wrangle students like it's just another Tuesday. Iconic. No notes.

Trista in the front office, scooting around on one good foot like it's an Olympic event, proving that even a broken foot can't slow down the most important person in the building.

And Mrs. Northway...where is she? Did she turn into one of Santa's elves and get stuck at the North Pole? Come home!

We've learned a lot, written a lot, and stared at screens long enough to earn this break. Now it's time to sleep in, eat way too many cookies, and dramatically say “see you next year” like we won't be back in a couple weeks.

🎄 Merry Christmas 🎁 Happy Holidays

And we'll see you next year!
