Clarence Senior Takes Flight in Aviation Technology Program

Clarence High School senior Connor Merlihan is soaring in the Aviation Technology program at the Harkness Career and Technical Education Center, where he is exploring his passion for flight and preparing for a future in the aviation industry.

Instructor Thomas Leach describes Connor as a strong, dedicated student who brings curiosity and commitment to class each day. "Connor is a great and hardworking student," Leach said.

Connor enrolled in the program to determine whether becoming a pilot was the right path for him, and it didn't take long for him to find his answer.

"This program has provided me with an advantage to reach my goals by giving me a head start and allowing me to experience flight firsthand with OnCore Aviation," he said. "Learning about all the other aspects of the aviation industry in class has given me greater appreciation for everyone in the field. Coming into class, I didn't know flying more than once was included, and it's an amazing opportunity to have."

After graduation, Connor plans to attend a professional flight school, taking the next step toward earning his wings and pursuing a career as a pilot.
