

Andrew Howard

Andrew has spent his career building education companies dedicated to personalized learning, from tutoring programs that reached over 100,000 students in underserved schools to award-winning AI-powered math platforms used nationwide. He now leads Addie, a voice-first AI global counselor that can talk to any student — from a flip phone in sub-Saharan Africa to an iPhone 17 in Seattle — in their own language, listen deeply, and give human counselors and teachers a powerful assistant. This work continues Andrew's focus on equity and innovation in education.

Closer to home, Andrew is first and foremost a dad, as well as an uncle to current and former Cardiff students. He also volunteers as a youth sports coach (with varying records, but consistent enthusiasm). Grateful for this small, close-knit community, he's proud to support the schools that have given his daughter, niece, and nephew such a strong foundation. He believes the district's best days are ahead as it continues to create an environment where every student can thrive.