Devastating Disasters

The latest updates

Breaking News from Fishbourne Palace

Citizens of Rome and Britannia, hear this sorrowful report. A terrible fire has struck the palace at Fishbourne. Flames rose high into the night, spreading quickly through the noble halls. Smoke covered the sky, and it was so strong that walls cracked and the roofs fell.

The palace was known for its beauty. Its mosaics showed gods, heroes, and patterns that reminded us of the greatness of Rome. Now, many of these treasures are gone. The fire destroyed rooms where romans of importance once walked, and where guests admired the power of our palace.

Witnesses say men rushed with buckets of water, but the blaze was too fierce. The fire seemed to grow faster than they could fight it. Some believe careless servants caused the disaster. Others whisper that it is a sign from the gods, warning us to be better.

This palace was more than stone and art. It was a symbol of Roman strength in Britain, showing that even far from Rome, our culture grows. Its loss is heavy on our hearts for all citizens. Guests, kings, and families who visited will remember its glory, but they will always mourn what has been taken.

Investigators will search for the cause, but the damage is done. Some parts may be repaired, yet the palace will never be the same. Let us honor its memory and hope that Rome will rise again from these ashes. May the gods guide us in rebuilding, and may future generations still learn of Fishbourne's greatness.

Interview with Togidubnus' son

You need to know

Fishbourne was our lovely place of many guests and a key part of Roman society. We interviewed Togidubnus to see his opinion on the matter:

So Togidubnus' son, this event, how do you and your wife feel?

We are devastated but we have accepted it, if the Gods want to punish us for being greedy, so be it. We are always in debt to them. I shall build another palace and have a huge gathering and we've decided to have even more servants to provide more jobs.

How caring! Will you miss anything from the palace?

Well, I will miss the money lost in this, I value it. I will also miss the mosaics. We had many beautiful ones but this is a chance to make more. More battle scenes, more gods, more beasts. BE PREPARED!

Well thank you for being here Togidubnus' son
