It's day three of Respect Week, and today we're learning about Microcephaly (my-crow-SEF-uh-lee), a condition where a baby's head is smaller than expected due to limited brain growth.

It can lead to learning delays, movement challenges, or seizures. Causes include genetics, infections during pregnancy, or exposure to harmful substances. While there's no cure, early therapies can help children grow and thrive. Everyone with Microcephaly (my-crow-SEF-uh-lee) deserves respect, support, and friendship—just like anyone else.

Let's keep building a kind and inclusive school, wear yellow, your best western attire. Have a wonderful Wednesday!

Unified Fact of the Day:

▪ Over 5.7 million Special Olympics athletes participate with Special Olympics Worldwide.
