Asynchronous Re-engagement

Asynchronous re-engagement programming is specifically designed for students who are returning to school, preparing to exit, or facing extenuating life circumstances. This program serves as a transitional pathway into one of the project-based learning (PBL) options, whether in-person, virtual, or evening formats. Asynchronous re-engagement may include Acellus, a self-paced online credit recovery platform that students and their families can access at no cost; laptops and hotspots are provided as needed. In addition to Acellus, students may earn engagement credits, which serve as elective credits to recognize meaningful learning occurring beyond the classroom. Notably, asynchronous re-engagement programming is highly individualized and represents the most tailored option among the four program offerings, ensuring support aligns closely with each student's unique needs.
