Where I stand today

Where I stand today is a bridge.
A bridge with two slopes.
Up and down over and over again.

The only spot where it is steady is on the top.
The top where I belong.
The top is where I stand.
The top where my goals are set.

The bridge that seems so little but means so much.
Not fitting in changing yourself to fit in is not the way
Not the way to get yourself to the top.

Just right back down to the bottom.
The bottom of the bridge is like the deep ocean floor.
The bottom of the bridge is like the feeling of disappointment.

All that work to change yourself.
For what? To get to the top?
No your right back down

Changing yourself does nothing
It doesn't make you go faster in a race,
It doesn't make you win in a board game.
It simply changes you.

A broken vase that was in pieces glued together
but that vase will never be the same.

So the bridge defines a simple statement.
A statement people hear and overlook.
A bridge people overlook thinking it's so small.

You belong how you are.
Don't cheat yourself to force your way to the top.
Be yourself, be who you want to be.
Change for yourself to get to the top of the bridge.