PRAIRIE WETLAND LEARNING CENTER

Naomi Baucom's Vision for the Prairie

Source: Naomi Baucom, Center Director, PWLC – U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service
Author: Mary Phillipe, Communications Coordinator, LCSC

For Naomi Baucom, the 330 acres of rolling tallgrass at the Prairie Wetlands Learning Center (PWLC) represent more than just a landscape—they act as a bridge linking science and the next generation.

As an experienced educator with over 20 years in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Baucom has taken on her role as the Center Director in Fergus Falls with a clear goal: to transform this "living laboratory" into a lively center of community involvement.

The PWLC, a government agency member of Lakes Country Service Cooperative, operates as a leading environmental education destination. It holds a special honor as the first residential environmental education center managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. In a program unlike any other in the United States, nearly 200 local 4th- and 5th-graders spend part of their regular school day at the PWLC. Using the prairie as a "living laboratory," students participate in on-site classroom and outdoor activities, guided in partnership between the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and Fergus Falls School District staff, to study science, ecology, applied mathematics, language arts, and phenology through nature journaling and field research. Regular PWLC activities students enjoy include wildlife investigations, prairie restoration, nature journaling, and winter exploration.

Naomi Baucom's Journey to Conservation

Naomi Baucom's passion for the outdoors began in her youth in the small town of Hood River, Oregon, located at the base of Mount Hood. Growing up fishing and camping with her father sparked an early interest in nature, but it wasn't until high school that she discovered her career path. "I only knew about marine biology; I didn't know there were other kinds of biology," Baucom recalled.

After a biology teacher introduced her to the world of the forest service, Baucom attended a leadership camp that solidified her dream: she wanted to be a wildlife biologist. In her mid-twenties, she earned her degree in Wildlife Biology from the University of Montana, where she was first introduced to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Wildlife Refuge System.

I'm good at delivering the conservation message to people– bridging the gap between the science and the public.

Naomi Baucom, Center Director, PWLC – U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Though she started in seasonal biological work, Baucom "accidentally" discovered her true calling while working as a contractor for a nonprofit at the Sacramento National Wildlife Refuge. Leading school groups helped her realize she was meant to be an environmental educator. For the last 20 years, she has worked with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service off and on. "It's really my passion!"

Now a seasoned professional, Baucom understands the specific niche of the refuge system. Unlike the park service, which she describes as "parks for the people," the refuge system focuses on "refuges for wildlife."

However, she notes that philosophy has evolved to recognize that connecting people to nature is vital for conservation of refuges.

Current Projects and the Future of the Prairie

One of the most significant initiatives underway is the complete restoration of the prairie, in partnership with the United Prairie Foundation. Because previous restoration efforts driven by limited resources in the 1970s and 80s resulted in low plant diversity, the team is now working to return the property to its original ecological state.

Over the next three to four years, they will utilize restoration strategies designed to restore high-diversity native plants through various seedings and aftercare, such as invasive species management, to revitalize the 330-acre tract. “Our goal is to showcase to the public an example of a fully restored and fully functioning native prairie ecosystem and to offer that to our Prairie Science Students as their outdoor classroom,” said Baucom.

Goals and Outreach

At the PWLC, Baucom serves as a liaison for the Friends of the Prairie and assists volunteers. Now that she has been at the PWLC for a year and has "her feet under her," Baucom is looking ahead with several key objectives.

- Community Involvement: Increasing outreach to youth groups like 4-H and making the facility's barn available for natural resource education.
- Volunteer Growth: Recruiting for the Friends of the Prairie board and volunteer base, including a recruitment event scheduled for April 15.
- Expanded Programming: Restoring the center’s operations to their former heights, including more partnerships and expanded hours for the Visitors Center.
- Seasonal Events: Continuing hallmark programs like Earth Day in April and monarch tagging in August.

While Baucom admits she has "grand ideas" that will take time and increased capacity to achieve, her primary focus remains the students. She finds the most joy in seeing children gain a foundation in conservation, ensuring they grow up connected to the lands and resources that define their community.

Youth in Civic Life:

Building a Pipeline of Community Leaders

Did you know it takes 30,000 election judges to run an election in Minnesota? That's a lot of local folks giving their time to democracy. I learned that fact recently while listening to Secretary of State Steve Simon and a panel of dedicated local election administrators in Detroit Lakes. Thanks to the West Central Initiative (WCI), Secretary Simon spent the day visiting several schools in our region and talking with students. It turns out that students aged 16 and older can take the training and become an election judge. What a great way to learn civics, develop those leadership and life skills, and contribute to community growth at the same time.

When we can foster these opportunities where young people both lead and learn, like becoming an election judge, participating on a local board, or designing community wellness projects, everyone, our youth, our schools, and communities, benefits well into the future.

WCI and Lakes Country Service Cooperative (LCSC) are partnering with each other and with youth-focused organizations and funders around the state under the auspices of the Aspen Institute for Community Solutions to initiate youth-centered programs around the four pillars of Belonging, Meaning, Wellbeing, and Purpose (BMWP).

BMWP is an emerging framework based on a growing body of evidence that youth thrive in communities where these four principles are embedded. Where youth thrive, communities thrive.

LCSC's Youth Data Summit (read about the summit in this issue's Youth Agency in Action article) in January kicked off our Youth Agency Collective program designed to build capacity in our schools to engage all youth in learning and leading opportunities.

Together with WCI, we will be bringing our school and community members more opportunities to engage youth in civic life.

Belonging	Having a meaningful voice and opportunity to participate in the design of political, social and cultural structures that shape one's life.[1]
Meaning	The ways in which people make sense of themselves, others and social situations.[2]
Wellbeing	Having the support, confidence, and resources needed to thrive in contexts of secure and healthy relationships, realizing their full potential and rights.[3]
Purpose	One's desire and intention to achieve something that is significant to one's life and of consequence to the world in which one lives.[4]

It Takes a Village to Build Child Care

By: Marsha Erickson
Early Childhood Specialist
West Central Initiative

In the early care and education world, we often hear the phrase "It takes a village." Nowhere is that more true than in the small lakeside community of Ottertail.

The City of Ottertail—population 721—sits on the east side of Otter Tail Lake, the largest lake in Otter Tail County and a major hub for regional tourism. When winter arrives, and seasonal residents head south, a core group of local business owners, city staff, and families remain. It's this committed group that chose to take on one of the community's most persistent challenges: access to child care.

For more than a decade, Ottertail business owners have voiced concerns about the lack of available child care. Family child-care providers would occasionally open a new program, fill immediately, and then close for various reasons, despite strong local support. The cycle left families scrambling and employers struggling to recruit and retain workers.

Turning Concern into a Community Plan

Three years ago, West Central Initiative provided funding to Otter Tail County through the Minnesota Initiative Foundation Legislative Appropriations funding to contract with a dedicated child-care project manager. Tammy Anderson, the contracted manager, brought deep experience as a former child-care center director, an early childhood educator, and a nonprofit fundraiser.

Working with the Ottertail Community Group, she helped define the child care need and develop an innovative plan: construct two twin homes designed specifically to house four Rule 2 Special License Family Child Care programs, with capacity to serve roughly 48 children.

"The child-care project manager role was a missing piece in building and sustaining the early care and education workforce," said Marsha Erickson, West Central Initiative Early Childhood Specialist. "The Minnesota Initiative Foundation Legislative Appropriations funding allowed us to create this role, which supports the community in connecting with resources and funding sources and in gathering the many pieces needed to bring the project to fruition."

From Vision to Licensed Child-Care Homes

Tammy also guided the group through a successful fundraising campaign and supported them as construction began on the new Ottertail Family Center. All four care spaces were recently licensed and are enrolling children. Early interest is strong enough that the committee anticipates a waiting list of future providers.

Throughout this process, the county licensor and the Child Care Aware Wayfinder Navigator have been actively supporting prospective providers as they work toward licensure and prepare their environments. Providers have also participated in First Children's Finance's Business Leadership cohort for new child-care entrepreneurs.

Building a Model for Greater Minnesota

This spring, the group will start on stage two, a new community center that includes a large indoor motor space available to the child-care programs.

Although still a relatively new model, the Rule 2 Special Family Child Care License has become a valuable strategy for Greater Minnesota communities seeking to expand child-care capacity. These projects give communities something tangible to rally around and open doors for individuals who want to enter the child-care profession but can't use or don't own a suitable home. Many newly graduated early childhood professionals have already found success through this model—demonstrating how powerful a village can be when it comes together.

Otter Tail County

earns State award for Heart of the Lakes Trail

Submitted by: Shannon Terry
Public Information Officer, Otter Tail County

Otter Tail County has been named the winner of the 2025 Minnesota County Engineers Association (MCEA) Special Project of the Year award for the Heart of the Lakes Trail.

The award recognizes the county's completion of a 30-mile trail connecting Perham and Pelican Rapids through Maplewood State Park. The trail is fully separated from vehicle traffic, creating a safe space for cyclists, runners, hikers, and others to enjoy.

"This trail represents years of dedication by county staff and commissioners, engineers, landowners, and community members," said Parks and Trails Director Kevin Fellbaum. "We worked with partners through the challenges and benefited from input by community members to create something that will enhance the lives of residents and visitors for generations."

The project took more than a decade to complete. County leaders started planning in 2014 with a corridor study. Construction began in 2020 and finished this year after five construction seasons. During the award ceremony, Pope County Engineer Brian Giese presented the award and shared, “Successful completion of the project required significant fortitude by those working to acquire right-of-way and design the project to address a plethora of competing interests across variable terrain and environmentally sensitive areas.”

The MCEA award recognizes a project that demonstrates unique design, environmental stewardship, community involvement and successful completion despite obstacles. The Heart of the Lakes Trail stood out for its ‘innovative funding approach, thoughtful environmental protection and extensive community engagement’. The trail's connection to Maplewood State Park creates a unique regional trail network.

The creation and completion of the trail was made possible through the county receiving funding from the Legislative-Citizen Commission on Minnesota Resources (LCCMR) and the Greater Minnesota Regional Parks and Trails Commission (GMRPTC) grants.

"Otter Tail County staff and our communities showed determination in completing this project," said County Commissioner Wayne Johnson. "This trail connects our communities and gives families a safe place to be active outdoors. It is truly a gem in our county."

Houston Engineering provided design, permitting, wetland work, construction inspection, railroad coordination, and public engagement throughout the project.

Christine Reilly
Executive Director
Habitat for Humanity of Douglas County

Habitat for Humanity® of Douglas County Minnesota

Habitat For Humanity Home Ownership Removing the Stigma

Source: Christine Reilly, Executive Director, Habitat for Humanity of Douglas County
Author: Mary Phillipe, Communications Coordinator, LCSC

Christine Reilly, the Executive Director of Habitat for Humanity of Douglas County (HFHDC), didn't just happen upon her role in the nonprofit sector—she discovered her true calling. Since entering this field in 2018, Reilly, who previously served as the Executive Director of the Alexandria Education Foundation and the Andria Theater, has built an impressive track record in nonprofit management. "I quickly realized that nonprofit work is the perfect fit for me," she expresses.

For Reilly, the mission is deeply personal. Habitat for Humanity originated at Koinonia Farms in Georgia, a project supported by her grandparents many years ago. Today, she proudly carries on that legacy in Douglas County.

"I genuinely believe in the work and the vision that everyone deserves a decent place to live," Reilly affirms. "I am committed to building a stronger community."

One of Reilly's goals is to shift the public perception that Habitat homes are "free." In reality, the program is a rigorous, multi-year investment for the future homeowner. It is often harder to qualify for a Habitat home than a traditional bank loan because it requires significant education and a "sweat equity" time commitment.With a median home price in Minnesota exceeding $300,000, an annual income of over $103,000 is required to purchase a first home. HFHDC bridges that gap for the people who staff our schools, hospitals, and local businesses.

When these participants sign their mortgage documents, they aren't just getting a key; they are becoming taxpayers and invested neighbors.

A housing study conducted by the City of Alexandria three years ago revealed a demand for eight to ten affordable homes annually, yet the last major housing development of this kind was back in 2002. HFHDC is currently the only organization meeting this need head-on.

The centerpiece of this effort is Summer Meadows, Habitat's first large-scale affordable housing development in Alexandria. This ambitious project will eventually provide 42 single-family homes.

New homeowners can take part in choosing the colors for their siding and countertops.

> Our clients are seeking affordable, stable housing. They are hardworking professionals—teachers, healthcare workers, and local employees.
> Christine Reilly, Executive Director, Habitat for Humanity of Douglas County

Currently, seven homes have been completed, and 2026 is set to be a landmark year with six more under construction.

This growth is bolstered by a unique partnership with Alexandria Community and Technical College. Students in the construction program build every piece of a home—including the cabinetry, providing them with on-the-job skills while creating significant cost savings for HFHDC.

Beyond the Build

While new construction makes headlines, Reilly's team of 11 full-time staff and hundreds of volunteers stay busy with other vital programs:

- The ReStore: A nonprofit home improvement store where proceeds directly fund affordable housing.
- Aging in Place: This program provides home improvements that allow seniors to stay in their homes longer and safely. The team has already hit its annual goal of 25 projects with three months left in the fiscal year.

The true success of Reilly's work isn't measured in square footage, but in the stability it provides to families—especially children. She recalls one homebuyer whose son had never invited friends over because he was uncomfortable with their living situation. "Now that they are homeowners, he feels more confident. He has a place to meet with his friends."

Advocacy work for Affordable Housing

In February 2026, Reilly traveled to Washington, D.C., to participate in Habitat's "Day on the Hill," where she met with lawmakers to discuss the bipartisan housing reform initiative.

> When the burden of housing is relieved, people become better community members.

"A shift is occurring," she observed. "Legislators are beginning to recognize how this affects their constituents and their own family members."During her visit, she witnessed the U.S. House pass the bipartisan Housing for the 21st Century Act (H.R. 6644) on February 9, 2026, with an overwhelming vote of 390-9. This marked a significant step towards increasing housing supply, modernizing federal programs, and reducing construction bureaucracy.

As Summer Meadows transitions from concept to community, Reilly remains dedicated to the long-term well-being of both the organization and the individuals it serves. She views each nail hammered and every mortgage finalized as a stride towards a more equitable Alexandria.

"I love the challenge of our ongoing growth and how we prepare our HFHDC team for success," she shares. With a community starting to recognize the individuals beyond the "stigma," HFHDC is not merely constructing homes—they are fortifying the workforce and shaping the future of Douglas County, one front door at a time.
